Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON X.

MAKE THE BARN WARM AND CLEAN: It should not freeze in the dairy barn during the coldest weather. Two boards with paper between is necessary for barn walls. Building paper on the inside and banking on the outside may be applied any time to make the barn more comfortable. A cold barn is expensive in that it requires more feed for your cows.

Most successful dairy farmers clean out the barn every day and haul the manure direct to the field. When the manure is left in the barn more than two days, fermentation begins and the air is polluted. Keep the barn clean, the calf pen as well as the cow stalls.

Pigs should never be kept in the same building or in an adjoining building with cows as their odor is offensive where dairy products are produced. Pure air is desirable in a dairy barn and a clean barn is necessary if there is to be pure air.

The Supreme Need

"The supreme need is to put law enforcement in the White House. An attempt is being made to convince the country that, no matter if a wet is elected President, the Constitution and laws will be enforced. This is both unsound and untrue. The White House in the hands of the liquor interests would be a veritable Gibraltar of offensive operations, and the doom of the Eighteenth Amendment would be written boldly upon the face of the Constitution.—Wm. G. McAdoo."—To be paid for by the W. C. T. U.

Hockey, 3-4

The first hockey game of the season was put on here Sunday, when the Strathcona puck-pushers came down with a strong line-up and played the local team The rink here was not as good on Sunday as a few days before, due to the warm weather which honeycombed some stretches of the ice.

Both teams played a good clean game and about a hundred people were there to see them in action.

The Strathcona boys, well-practised and speedy, took the game away from the locals to the tune of 4-3. The local team expects to motor to Strathcona on Sunday afternoon for a return game.

Park in North Dakota to Honor a Great American

If a bill now before congress is passed, a new national park will be established in the West which will not only preserve for the nation a true "Nature's Wonderland," but will also perpetuate the memory of a great American amid the scenes of one of the most important periods in his life

The proposed park will include the famous Bad Lands of North Dakota and it will bear the name of "Roosevelt National Park" in honor of the President who spent several years as a ranchman in that region and who afterwards referred to those years as among the happiest of his whole life.

There is an illustrated feature article by Elmo Scott Watson in this issue of The NEWS which tells about the proposed park and some of the romantic history of that region. Be sure to read "A Roosevelt Memoriol National Park."

Runaway

The St. Hilaire basketball team came up here on Monday evening to have a game with the locals. The score-keeper was the busiest man at the game, as he marked up 52 points for the locals and 16 for the visitors. We did not see the game ourselves, but one fellow reported that he could have beat St. Hilaire single-handed, as they seemed unable to get their bearings on the local floor.

He stated that the floor refused to "stay put" for a few of the visitors, which accounts for the uneven count on the score-card.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of St. Joseph, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I can not speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness, their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

Thousands of testimonial letters have been received from women in different walks of life, stating that the Compound has helped them.

The BABY

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

STORY FROM THE START

Handsome, fastidious and wealthy—young St. Croix Creighton awaits his sweetheart at their trysting place. She is late, this ordinary little Pennsylvania Dutch girl, Meely Schwenckton. Despite her seeming innocence and ignorance, she succeeds in keeping him at a distance, to his chagrin. Meely, in the Schwenckton home, where she is boarding, is altogether unlike the girl who meets St. Croix clandestinely. She is the teacher in the neighborhood school, of which Marvin Creighton, St. Croix' brother, is superintendent. Meely learns that Marvin was to have married his cousin, a titled English lady, but, believing she was attracted by the Creighton wealth, had refused the alliance. It is the rumor that St. Croix is to take Marvin's place and marry the English girl. St. Croix' jealousy is aroused by Meely's report of an aged suitor for her hand. The girl cleverly decoys him into admitting he has no intention of marrying her. Marvin visits school in his official capacity as superintendent and discovers how shockingly little Meely knows about school teaching.

"No," she decided, "for he is really fastidious and Nettie's a hopelessly common little thing. And yet, if he can stand me and the dope I hand out to him—"

She did not know, however, that St. Croix, to his own wonder, never felt that she was "common" or vulgar; not even when she manifested the intelligence of a sheep or twisted the English language until his nerves were rasped; not even when she sat sprawling ungracefully with her feet far apart, nor when, after tasting an apple, she drew the back of her hand across her mouth.

She was a good actress, but there was that something inherent that nothing could disguise—

* * * * * * * *

It was just when, relieved of Aunt Rosy's espionage, Meely was beginning to feel, in spite of the dangerous proximity of Marvin Creighton, more at her ease, less insecure in her equivocal position, that, on that very evening when she sat in the warm, bright kitchen, peacefully writing letters, she was to find the complexity and precariousness of her situation greatly increased by the outcome of an episode which was, at that same hour, in its incipiency on a Sunbury street corner, eight miles distant.

Mr. Sam Schwenckton, having finished the business which had taken him to town, was about to enter his car parked on the edge of the town, and start for home, when a man standing on the corner, apparently waiting for a trolley car, approached him.

"Pardon me—how often do these cars run?" the man inquired in a tone of extreme irritation. "I've been waiting here twenty minutes!"

"It don't run no cars on this line after seven o'clock, Mister. This here trolley line ain't doin' much business anyhow, so it stops till seven a'ready. You must be a stranger here—ain't?—or you'd o' knowed that."

"No—but I seldom use the trolley. Today, however, I had to leave my automobile at the repair shop. Are you, by any chance, driving out this road?"

"Yes, eight mile out."

"Will you, then, for a consideration, let me go with you?"

Now as the night was raw and wet, it would, Mr. Schwenckton felt, be only a Christian act to offer this stranger a seat in his car. Also, he liked company, some one to talk to on an eight-mile drive. But the newspapers were so full of holdup stories—and he was carrying a good deal of money — wouldn't he be taking chances?

The man looked so decent, however (what could be seen of him in the dimness) and Mr. Schwenckton had, as always when he traveled at night, brought his revolver with him—

He felt in his pocket and surreptitiously moved his pistol from his right-hand pocket to his left.

"I wouldn't want no sich a 'consideration,' Mister. Just so's you ain't one of these here thugs you can read about in the papers—"

The man laughed. "You're twice my size. If I can trust you not to hold me up, I guess you're safe!"

"Yes, I guess that's so too. All right. Come on, then."

Mr. Schwenckton felt rather cheated when he found that the stranger, though sociable and agreeable enough, was not going to repay his hospitality by satisfying his curiosity as to who he was. All the leading questions with which the farmer plied him received evasive answers. This seemed to Mr. Schwenckton so suspicious that he frequently felt in his left-hand pocket to be ready in case of need.

However, he tried to put his apprehensions aside and to beguile the ride with friendly talk.

"So your car had to go to the shop, heh?"

"Yes, worse luck!"

"When I first got my car I drove her and drove her till I got the cold in my chest and it near give pneumonia yet! Yes, anyhow!"

The stranger made a sound expressive of his sympathy. For a while they drove in silence.

"Funny thing happened in the bank today," Mr. Schwenckton resumed conversationally. "When I went in to get a check cashed—" He stopped short in consternation—how tactless to mention having cashed a check!

"What was it?" asked his companion.

"Not much—a dollar or so. I spent it," said Mr. Schwenckton pointedly.

"I mean what was the funny thing that happened?"

"Oh, that! Well, a lady standin' alongside of me in the bank she handed in a check and the banker he said to her, 'What denomination?' and she says sort of snappy, 'Well,' she says. 'I'm a Presbyterian, but I don't see what business it is of yourn,' she says."

The laugh in which they joined over this yarn seemed to establish between them more confidence. Mr. Schwenckton, always warm-hearted, was sorry he had been feeling so suspicious of a fellow man and tried to atone by being as friendly as possible.

"Was you ever to New York, Mister?"

"Yes."

"That's a place I never seen. But my brother he was always set on seein' this here New York oncet, that you can read so much about in the papers. So at last his missus she says to him, she says, 'Pop,' she says, you're gettin' on in life and if you don't go soon to this here New York, you'll be too old to go.' So, then, he said he'd go oncet. So she helped him get ready and start off. 'Now, mind you, write,' she says to him, 'and tell me how you like it.' So after a couple of days she got such a pitcher post card from him and he'd wrote on it, 'Mom, Yi, yi, yi, yi! Pop.'"

Again their joint laughter seemed to bring them sympathetically close.

Since leaving the lighted town, the road had been very dark, for the night was cloudy and starless.

"Where do you want out, stranger?" Mr. Schwenckton presently inquired. As he spoke, he took his hand from the steering wheel to have a glance at his watch—and as he did so, the man beside him gave an uneasy start.

With a shock of some horror, Mr. Schwenckton's fingers found an empty pocket where his watch should have been! Instantly he stopped his car and jerked out his revolver. "Now, then, you hand out that there watch and then you run for your life!" he shouted.

The man obeyed with alacrity, thrusting the watch into the farmer's outstretched hand, leaping from the car and disappearing in the blackness of the road.

Mr. Schwenckton, greatly shaken by so narrowly escaping being manhandled by a thug, his soul heavy with sadness at the desperate wickedness of man, went on his solitary way, musing on his own folly in having let his kindness of heart get the better of his prudence.

"It ain't safe to take up strangers these days—that it ain't! And me, I was always too trusting that way! Well, this here's certainly a lesson to me! Be kind to your fellah-creatures, yes—up to the danger point. That's all the further a fellah darst be a Christian these days!"

His despair over the perfidy of our human nature deepened as he reflected upon the "gentility" of the thief: his "nice" voice, his "educated" speech, his "polite manners"—what with his "Beg pardon," "Thank you very much—"

"A slick one, he was! I can't never trust no one's appearances again!" thought Mr. Schwenckton with a sorrowful shake of his head. "That's the worst harm a crook does—he spreads abroad a mistrust of man made in the image of Gawd!"

Fifteen minutes later Mr. Schwenckton, usually the most placid of men, confronted his family in the kitchen, looking so white and agitated that Meely and Nettie sprang up greatly startled, and even Susie looked at him inquiringly.

"I was held up and robbed!" he announced. "Not two mile up the road yet!"

"Ach! Was you hurt?" cried Nettie in a fright, running to him.

"No, I ain't hurt. And I ain't lost nothin' neither! I held the crook up and got back what was stole off of me! That's what I done!"

"Ach, Pop!" Nettie gasped in mingled terror and admiration.

"Good thing I took my rewolwer with! It ain't safe, these rough times, to travel at night without a gun along!"

He told them, then, as he removed his hat, coat and gloves, just what happened—giving his story a dramatic climax. "'Now, then,' I says to him, 'you hand out that there watch and then you run for your life!' I says. And he did! With that there rewolwer of mine in his face, he done what I tol' him and pretty quick about it too! Yes, and I guess he's runnin' yet!"

"Yes, well, but," Susie stolidly spoke to him over her shoulder, "you didn't take your watch along. You let it at home. You forgot it. There it lays." She thrust her thumb backward toward a small shelf which held a convenient comb and brush for family use.

Her husband stared at her incredulously as she calmly rocked her sleeping infant—then, desperately hoping to prove her words false, he fearfully drew from his pocket the watch he demanded from the stranger, and slowly, reluctantly, he let his eyes fall upon it.

It was not his!

Such a watch it was as he could never hope, nor even wish, to own. Gold, jeweled, initialed.

In a stride he stood before the shelf and beheld his own accusing watch.

"I was sayin' to Nettie," said Susie, "that you'd be awful put out at goin' without your watch along."

"And I never oncet missed it!" the wretched man murmured.

"But—why, my lands!" faltered Nettie, "this here's got an awful look!—like as if you'd held that there man up and stole his watch, Pop!"

"And I don't know who it is to give it back!" Mr. Schwenckton's voice was agonized. "If I never find him, it'll make me feel awful conscientious to keep his watch! Yi, yi, yi!" he shook his head and began agitatedly to pace the length of the kitchen.

"Oh, you'll have no trouble finding him, Mr. Schwenckton," said Meely encouragingly. "He'll of course report to the police and they'll easily trace you up."

"Yes, and arrest me for a thief yet!" exclaimed Mr. Schwenckton.

"I'll tell you!" cried Meely. "You report to the police, Mr. Schwenckton, and tell them of your mistake—and that you want them to find the man. That will save you."

Mr. Schwenckton stopped in his agitated walking to and fro, and looked at Meely admiringly. "You're got the head on you, Meely! I didn't think that far myself. Education's a a grand help to a body in this here life! That's what I'll do this selfsame minute!"

He went to the telephone, but found the line "busy."

"Delay may be fatal!" said Meeley anxiously. "You must report it before he does. He has had a good deal of time already—all the time you've been home unloading your car and putting it in the garage—and the time you've been in the house—"

"Yes, well, but I don't think he'll be reportin' it wery soon—I started him on a good run and I guess he's still runnin'!"

It was at this instant that they were all startled by a rap on the kitchen door, and before anyone could answer it, the door opened and a wet, bedraggled and very tired-looking young man almost staggered into the room, closing the door behind him and leaning against it heavily.

Rules That Govern Kinship of Cousins

In answering a correspondent's query, "What relation are the children of first cousins to each other? What relation to me is my first cousin's child?" the Pathfinder Magazine says:

"Reckoning cousin relationships is simple if you start out right. A cousin is one collaterally related by descent from a common ancestor, but not a brother or sister. Children of brothers and sisters are first cousins to one another: sometimes they are called cousins-german, own cousins, or full cousins. The children of first cousins are 'second cousins' to one another; children of second cousins are third cousins to one another, and so on. The child of one's first cousin is a first cousin once removed; the grandchild of one's first cousin is a first cousin twice removed, and so on. Confusion sometimes arises from the custom of some people who speak of the children and grandchildren of their first cousins as second and third cousins, respectively, but the practice is only local. The correct and almost universal rule for reckoning cousins is as we have given it."

Taste and Invention

For generations past architecture has been so overladen with extraneous matter that many authorities actually preach that in this branch of art it is in bad taste to invent. Correct architecture, they say, consists merely in reassembling borrowed forms. All of which is palpably absurd. If the Greeks had thought so there never would have been any Greek art. On the contrary, architecture, now as ever, consists in solving problems of utility as economically and appropriately as may be.—New York Sun.

Small Girl Quick to See Point in Favor

Mavourneen, age four, had never been entirely convinced on the household rule that she should comb her hair, regardless of the hurry in dressing to "go somewhere." The youngster frequently protested to her mother, against what, to the youthful mind, was a needless waste of time.

The other evening the family car was passing Pump Company No. 8 in Massachusetts avenue, just as an alarm came in. The sudden stop of traffic; the quick scramble among the firemen to board the truck, as it raced out the doors, left the youngster speechless, but she soon came back to normalcy by exclaiming: "Now, you see, mother, they didn't stop to comb their hair."—Indianapolis News.

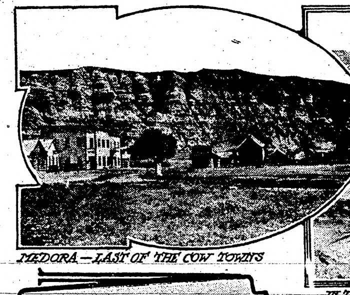
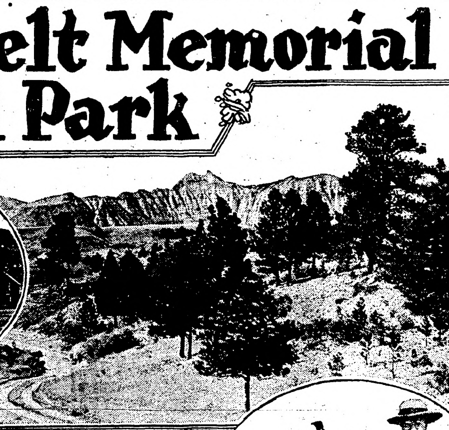
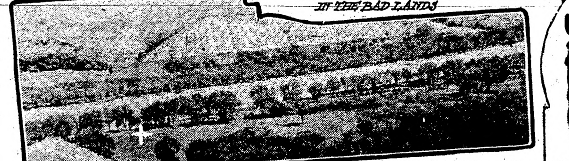
A Roosevelt Memorial National Park



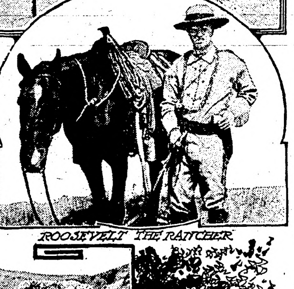
MEDORA—LAST OF THE COW TOWNS



IN THE BAD LANDS

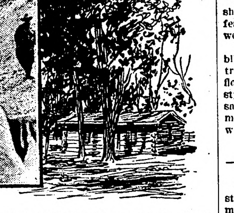


SITE OF ELKHORN RANCH



ROOSEVELT THE RANCHER

GOV. A. G. SORLIE AND PARTY IN BAD LANDS



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF A BILL now before congress is passed during the present session, the people of America will have a new national park which will perpetuate the memory of the life of a great American amid the scenes of one of the most important periods in his career. The bill is known officially as H. R. 298, and it is a measure introduced by Representative James H. Sinclair of North Dakota to establish the Roosevelt National park in the Bad Lands of his state. Two years ago Congressman Sinclair introduced a similar bill, but it, along with much other legislation, was lost in the eleventh-hour jam, caused by a filibuster, which marked the closing scenes of the Sixty-ninth congress.

But North Dakota, which believes it has as many natural wonders to show the people of this country as has its sister state, South Dakota, which became so much better known nationally through the visit of President Coolidge to the Black Hills last summer, now hopes that the present bill will pass and that it will have the privilege of giving to the nation a new national playground. Among the prime movers in the project to establish a national park in the Bad Lands are Former Governor J. M. Devine, now state immigration commissioner; Walter F. Cushing, publisher of the Beach (N. D.) Advance and former editor of the Fargo Courier-News, and other leading men of the state. Soon after Congressman Sinclair introduced his first bill, the state legislature passed the following concurrent resolution which has been presented to congress in support of the project:

Concurrent resolution (introduced by Mr. R. O. Signalness and Mr. Walter Tester) memorializing the congress of the United States to establish the Roosevelt National park in Billings county, N. D., and to provide for the substitution of public lands of the United States for the state school lands located within the proposed park area.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the state of North Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill to establish the Roosevelt National park in Billings county, N. D., introduced by Congressman Sinclair of North Dakota, December 7, 1925, being H. R. 3942; and

Whereas the tract of land in such proposed park consists of the petrified forest and the famous "Bad Lands" lying on both sides of the Little Missouri river in Billings county, N. D., where Theodore Roosevelt operated his historic cattle ranches and hunted wild game in the early history of Dakota territory, and which tract is admirably fitted by nature for scenic purposes and preserves in its natural state the mountainous character and the wild, unchanged condition which existed in the West fifty years ago, and which tract it is practicable and appropriate to preserve as a national park in the honor of Theodore Roosevelt, in the interest of American scenic beauty, and as a relic of the traditional pioneer conditions of the West, which have all but disappeared from the North American continent; and

Whereas there is included in said proposed park area approximately 42,000 acres of public lands belonging to the state of North Dakota known as state school lands, which was granted to it by the United States under sections 10 and 11 of the enabling act of February 22, 1889, to be held in trust by the state of North Dakota for the common schools, which land, on account of its rough and barren character, cannot be sold for the minimum price of $10 per acre, as prescribed in section 11 of said enabling act, and from which the state of North Dakota gets only a nominal income; and, it further appearing that it would be expedient to exchange the said school lands located within such proposed park area for public lands of the United States of like quantity, character, and value located in the vicinity of such proposed park: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Twentieth legislative assembly of the state of North Dakota hereby indorses said Roosevelt National park project and respectfully urges the congress of the United States to establish a national park as provided for in said H. R. 3942; and, be it further

Resolved, That congress, in furtherance of said park project, make appropriate provisions for exchanging with the state of North Dakota public lands of the United States, of equal quantity, character, and value, for the state school lands lying within said proposed park area heretofore granted to the state of North Dakota under the provisions of sections 10 and 11 of the enabling act of February 22, 1889; and, be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the senate and house of representatives of the United States, and to the senators and congressmen for the state of North Dakota.

JNO. W. CARR,
Speaker of the House.
C. R. VERRY,
Chief Clerk of the House.
WALTER MADDOCK,
President of the Senate.
W. D. AUSTIN,
Secretary of the Senate.

The Bad Lands, which have been pronounced by authorities as being the most ideal, naturally formed wild game preserve in the country, and second only to the Yellowstone National park in scenic interest and awe-inspiring beauty, lie in the western section of the state along the Little Missouri river and pass through five counties—Dunn, McKenzie, Golden Valley, Billings and Slop. They extend 91 miles from north to south and have an average width of 14 miles.

"The name is ill-given from our standpoint," says one writer, "but natural to the Indian who roamed over and named the region, for it was indeed Make Sika (bad land), as far as travel was concerned.

"Among those hills for untold ages unique animal forms roamed and fought and died. The world's greatest fossil bed is there and to this section paleontologists come from every part of the world seeking valuable fossils to be found only there. Over all Europe one can read labels on the valuable fossils collected in the great museums, 'From the Bad Lands of North Dakota, U. S. A.'

"Occasionally one reads about the saber-toothed tiger with its teeth that could pierce the thickest hide. Ten of these animals with some saber teeth in perfect condition have been found in the Bad Lands. The king of all Bad Lands beasts was the brontotherium, measuring 15 feet in length, 8 feet in height. For 500,000 years these animals roamed and ruled. A number of skulls with the horns were among the finds last year.

"There also roamed over these Bad Lands herds of giant pigs, we now call the entelodon, the ancestral swine. This animal had the characteristics of a wild boar while resembling the hippopotamus and the horse. This sounds like a nightmare, and such it would have appeared to the human being—had there been one at that time. Climatic conditions were very different during the Miocene than they are now, for then the Bad Lands must have had a tropical climate."

The Bad Lands, however, are interesting to others besides the scientist, for the name "Creation's Workshop," which is often applied to them, is a good indication of the scenic wonders found there. Thousands of years of erosion, of weathering by water, frost and wind have resulted in fantastic rock formations unlike those found in any other part of the United States. There are towering buttes and pinnacles, wrinkled with age and erosion, rock formations with gargoyle figures of weird beauty. The canyon of the Little Missouri offers one of the most remarkable examples of the effect of erosion for, in addition to the usual weathering, here is shown the effect of slumping strata, due to the burning of lignite coal where the veins were exposed on the canyon wall and which are still burning miles underground.

But the geological and scenic are not the only attractions of this country. It has a host of historic associations, too, the most interesting of which center around the activities of a young New Yorker, named Theodore Roosevelt, who arrived there one September morning in 1883 in search of both health and adventure. He went first to the Chimney Butte ranch as the guest of the owners, Sylvane and Joe Ferris and William J. Merrifield, and, after a buffalo hunt with Joe Ferris, entered into a partnership with Merrifield and Sylvane Ferris and started a cow ranch with the maltese cross brand.

Later he brought out from Maine two woodsmen friends, Sewell and Dow, to help start the Elkhorn ranch lower down on the Little Missouri and his brand for the lower ranch were the elk horn and the triangle. That the young easterner fell in love with the country and the life which he led there for the next three years is shown by the following quotation from the Scribner memorial edition of Roosevelt's collected works:

> I do not believe that there was ever any life more attractive to a vigorous young fellow than life on a cattle ranch in those days. It was a fine, healthy life, too; it taught a man self-reliance, hardihood and the value of instant decision—in short, the virtues that ought to come from life in the open country. I enjoyed the life to the full. After the first year I built on the Elkhorn ranch a long, low, ranch house of hewn logs, with a veranda, and with, in addition to the other rooms, a bedroom for myself, and a sitting room with a big fireplace. I got out a rocking chair—I am very fond of rocking chairs—and enough books to fill two or three shelves, and a rubber bathtub so that I could get a bath. And then I do not see how anyone could have lived more comfortably. We had buffalo robes and bearskins of our own killing. We always kept the house clean—using the word in a rather large sense. There were at least two rooms that were always warm, even in the bitterest weather; and we had plenty to eat. Commonly the mainstay of every meal was game of our own killing, usually antelope or deer; sometimes grouse or ducks, and occasionally in the earlier days, buffalo or elk. . . .
>
> We also had flour and bacon, sugar, salt and canned tomatoes. And later, when some of the men married and brought out their wives we had all kinds of good things, such as jams and jellies, made from the wild plums and the buffalo berries, and potatoes from one forlorn little garden patch. . . .
>
> My home ranch stood on the river brink. (Note: the site is marked X in the picture shown above.) From the low, long veranda, shaded by leafy cottonwoods, one looks across sandbars and shallows to a strip of meadowland, behind which rises a line of sheer cliffs and grassy plateaus. This veranda is a pleasant place in the summer evenings when a cool breeze stirs along the river and blows in the faces of the tired men, who loll back in their rocking chairs (what true American does not enjoy a rocking chair?), book in hand—though they do not often read the book, but rock gently to and fro, gazing sleepily out at the weird-looking buttes opposite, until their sharp lines grow indistinct and purple in the afterglow of the sunset.
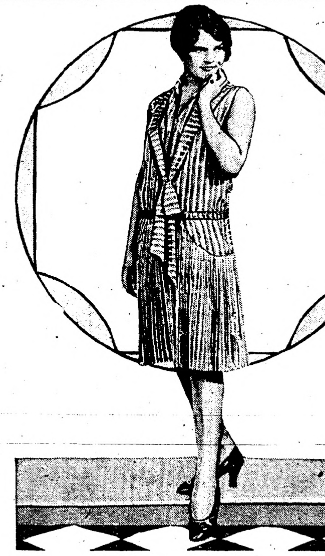
> Rough board shelves held a number of books, without which some of the evenings would have been long indeed. No ranchman who loves sport can afford to be without Van Dyke's "Still Hunter," Dodge's "Plains of the Great West," or Caton's "Deer and Antelope of America," and Coue's "Birds of the Northwest" will be valued if he cares at all for natural history. A western plainsman is reminded every day by the names of prominent landmarks among which he rides that the country was known to men who spoke French long before any of his own kinsfolk came to it, and hence he reads with a double interest Parkman's histories of the early Canadians. As for Irvin, Hawthorne, Cooper, Lowell and the other standbys, I suppose no man, East or West, would willingly be long without them; while for lighter readings there are dreamy Ik Marvel, Burroughs' breezy pages, and the quaint, pathetic character sketches of the southern writers—Cable, Craddock, Macon, Joel Chandler Harris, and sweet Sherwood Bonner. And when he is in the Bad Lands one feels as if they somehow look just exactly as Poe's tales and poems sound.

That ranch house which he mentions now stands on the state capitol grounds at Bismarck as a memorial to the great American who was once a citizen of North Dakota, but otherwise the scenes of his ranching days, which will be included in the proposed national park, are but little changed from what they were when T. R. rode on the round-up or hunted for game there. And North Dakotans, who point to the fact that it was here that the future Rough Rider of Spanish-American war days, governor of New York and vice president of the United States, learned his lessons of "self-reliance, hardihood and the value of instant decision" which made him one of our truly great Presidents, believe that all Americans who hold his memory in reverence will be interested in seeing the new national park established in their state, not only because of the scenic wonders which it will preserve, but as a fitting memorial to the man it will honor when it bears the name of Roosevelt National park.



Seen in the Southland.

ers over one ear, balancing it on the opposite side with a similar brush in white.

The brush felt pictured to the center-right tucks a fan-shaped brush of feathers under each end of a flap which extends across the back of the hat.

The very clever little felt toque shown last in the group works in a feather band across the front as if it were a very part of the hat.

Not only to the elect who are blissfully whiling away the wintry months under the palms amid flowers and sunshine do the so-called styles for the Southland bear a message of importance. These selfsame modes are as vital a theme to those who linger about the home hearth- over one sleeve one of the stunning new gold-finished bracelets.

The plaited flounce in the picture is handled very uniquely where it is joined to the skirt in a point. Another style item is the pretty tie-collar. Scarf effects are to be "the go" on summer frocks, which should be kept in mind by the home dressmaker when choosing patterns for forthcoming frocks and blouses.

The use of solid color with patterned prints registers prominently in advance styles. These are so interworked as to trim each other, especially in ensemble costumes, for which a continued vogue is assured for the season.

More Cars Than Phones

Statistics compiled by the Chrysler statistical division show that there are more motor cars than telephones in use today. The automobile industry now surpasses the steel business, the clothing and the telephone industry in size. It has become the world's most important commercial activity except providing food, clothing and shelter for humanity.

The POLICY of PROGRESS

◆

A STATEMENT by GENERAL MOTORS

IT is the policy of General Motors to maintain continuous improvement, in every one of its car divisions, with no interruption in production.

This means that you enjoy the benefits of new engineering developments promptly — just as soon as they have been thoroughly tested on the 1245-acre Proving Ground.

It means that you can now order the new Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Oakland, Buick, LaSalle, Cadillac, or GMC Truck, and receive immediate delivery.

Behind this policy of continuous improvement is an organization so widespread and resourceful that it can make and sell quality automobiles more economically than any automobile manufacturer in the world.

In the north and south it logs and mills its own lumber. In the east it makes its own ball bearings and radiators. In the middle west it produces its own plate glass. Its plants are busy in 33 important American cities.

From almost 5,000 suppliers, its materials are obtained—steel by the hundreds of thousands of tons—wire by the tens of thousands of miles—upholstery by the acre—nuts, bolts and washers by the millions. Its sales and service take place through 33,000 dealers. More than 275,000 families look directly to General Motors for their livelihood—almost a million and a half men, women and children in every community in the land.

Meaning so much to so many, General Motors has felt a supreme obligation to look ahead.

Are there methods by which General Motors cars can be better built to better serve?

Are there new ideas which can increase the utility and pleasure and safety of motoring?

Are there new materials which can add to owner satisfaction?

Such are the questions that all General Motors engineers have always asked. The answers have made it possible, year after year, to offer an increasing measure of beauty in design, modern performance, riding comfort and distinct style. Thus in every price class, from Cadillac to Chevrolet, purchasers are constantly benefiting from the General Motors policy of progress.

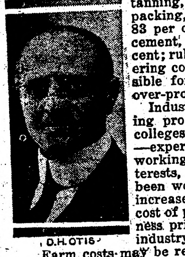
BETTER FARMING AT LOWER COSTS

By DAN H. OTIS

Director Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association



D.H. OTIS

PRODUCTIVITY of labor in several industries shows a remarkable increase in output per man since 1914. In the iron and steel industry there has been an increase of 59 per cent; boots and shoes, 6 per cent; leather tanning, 26 per cent; slaughtering and meat packing, 27 per cent; petroleum refining, 83 per cent; paper and pulp, 34 per cent; cement, 61 per cent; automobiles, 172 per cent; rubber tires, 211 per cent. These lowering costs of production have made it possible for industry to face the hazards of over-production.

Industry has laboratories that are lowering production costs. In the agricultural colleges the farmers have their laboratories—experiment stations that are constantly working on problems affecting farmers' interests, and in them many methods have been worked out by which it is possible to increase materially the yield, reduce the cost of production and follow the same business principles that have been followed by industry.

Farm costs may be reduced through improved live stock. If there were only pure-bred live stock on the farms and ranges, we could get along with millions less animals, and that would release millions of acres for other purposes.

The accompanying table shows what each of seven items of live stock is producing; what each of these items could be made to produce by improved methods, and finally what the saving would be in each class. It gives a total national saving of over two billion dollars.

United States Livestock Production

Kind	Number	Production	Per Head	Possible by Improved Methods			Cost per Head	Total Saving

Total								$2,389,729,792

*Slaughtered and inspected. †Dressed weight.

From this table it will be noticed that, if we could obtain a reasonable average production per head, then the number of milch cows could be reduced from 22,000,000 to 13,000,000, or a reduction of 9,000,000, and still maintain the present supply of dairy products. This would involve increasing the production per cow from 3,549 pounds of milk to 6,077 pounds, an increase easily possible through good selection, breeding and feeding.

Beef animals vary in age all the way from one to three years. The present number of animals slaughtered and inspected would be sufficient under improved methods to produce the present amount of beef, and feed the animals only one year. Taking the amount of food that could be reasonably obtained from a two-year-old we find that it would be possible to keep up the present supply of beef and cut down on the number of animals slaughtered by 3,684,000. This would mean great savings in feed.

In a similar manner our present supply of slaughtered and inspected mutton and lamb could be supplied with 2,661,000 less animals, and it is possible to furnish our present supply of wool and reduce the number of sheep by over 7,000,000.

Our pork products are now produced from swine that average 136 pounds dressed weight. Under improved methods we ought to get pigs that would produce 150 pounds dressed weight at 6 months or 225 pounds at 9 months. At the latter age it would be possible to maintain the present supply of slaughtered and inspected pork and cut down nearly 17,000,000 on the number of hogs to produce it. Similar analyses apply to the other items listed in the table.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XI.

There are over 600 co-operative creameries in Minnesota. They are the dairy farmers' factories and pay from 4c to 7c per pound more for butterfat because they give the farmers the manufacturers' profit.

The yearly business of the average co-operative creamery is over $100,000.00. It is not only a profitable enterprise for the whole community, but it teaches good business methods. Every creamery patron who takes an active interest in the creamery is a better business farmer.

Co-operative creameries hold their meeting soon after the first of the year. No farmer can spend a day to better advantage than to attend the annual meeting of his co-operative creamery and to study its annual report. Co-operative creameries are successful thru having a sufficient patronage, thru making high quality butter, and thru good business management. The more farmers in the community who understand the business of the co-operative creamery, the greater the success of the creamery.

This will be the first time that Arno Steinhauer delivered more than 500 lbs. of butterfat for anyone month. J. P. Augustine being second this month is the only other patron that delivered more than 500 lbs. butterfat, he exceeded that amount twice before, at one time had 567 lbs. in month of January 1927. Both Davis and Voth were one of the first five in November report but inspite of the fact that C. Engen increased his amount over Nov. 13 lbs. of butterfat, Mehrkens beat him to it for 5th place. The question of variation in cream tests is asked the Operator in charge of a creamery more than any other. Usually the average patron forgets all about his test if it is on the upward trend but, if it goes down and continues to go down he at once wants to know the cause. Why should he not wonder why it goes up as well, as long as he has done nothing to expect a change in his test?

For the benefit of those that might be interested let me quote A. P. Ryger's of the South Dak., Dairy Improvement Association's findings. He states that there are five principal factors for this variation. 1st, variation in richness of milk. 2d, temperature of milk when skimmed, 3rd, speed of separator, 4th, amount of skimmilk or water permitted to enter the cream when bowl is flushed, 5th, which I claim is very important and often overlooked by our patrons, cleanliness of the separator bowl after each skimming. The colder the richer the cream.

Cold milk skimming results in less cream and a possible loss of butterfat in the skimmilk. Milk should be skimmed at or near 85 degrees Fahrenheit at all times. It is a known fact by most of our patron that if the speed of the separator varies that the test will vary. Flushing of the bowl is one factor that I believe causes a great deal of variation in test. You perhaps say I look after that part of it. I say we are all human and when butterfat prices for the year average about 50c per lb. is it not reasonable to believe that no matter who flushes the bowl as long as they are interested in getting every thing they can out of their cows that they aren't going to leave any cream in the bowl go to waste, hence it is very easy to see that quite often more or less water or skimmilk will enter the cream.

No separator that is not washed twice a day winter or summer will do the work it should and, let me tell you an unwashed separator bowl, even in the winter time, doesn't help raise our Land O' Lakes quality, in fact no cream should be given a Land O' Lakes grading that come from a separator that is not washed two times a day.

If we are to get the most of our own Brand, Land O' Lakes which means more to the average dairy farmer than he really can appreciate, let me say in closing that we do our part to make the L. O' Lakes butter better then ever.

Our average tests is lower than it used to be. Let us raise it a point or two, at least try and get a 30 test.

THE HOLT SCHOOL RECORD

Published by the Seventh and Eighth Grades

This month so far has been a very strenuous one on both the pupils and the teachers. Valentine's Day, Lincoln's Birthday and Washington's Birthday have all come and gone for this year; but they are not forgotten.

The Valentine party given by the High School for the faculty and the seventh and eighth grades was well attended and judging from all the reports plenty of the heart shaped greetings were received.

Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays were observed by each grade in their respective rooms Short programs were given in honor of the two greatest Americans. No other Americans have had such an influence on the minds of children. Washington as the dignified, and respected statesman was the soul of honor and loyalty to the American people. Whatever records may show up, he never need be ashamed. Lincoln as the simple, homely and humerous man guided our notion through its period of strife and proved to the world that honesty and truth with charity towards all are the foundation of a true nation

The childred in the primary room are very busy fixing their sandtables on which will appear a new Indian village in the near future.

The third and fourth grades have a chart on which are listed the childrens' names and how many books the have read. A child who receives credit for outside reading is likely to read more.

The third and fourth grades are trying very hard not to receive a black star on their health chart. Certain pupils are appointed as inspectors to look over the children to see if all faces are clean and all teeth have been brushed.

The fifth and sixth grades are making charts to illustrate the health rules they have been studying in Hygiene and Sanitation.

The seventh grade geography class are working hard to find pictures to illustrate the continent of Asia. Two bulletin boards have been put up and on these the pictures are pasted. The heading for both charts is "Asia The Birthplace of Civilization."

The Eighth grade has been catching up in the spelling contest and unless the seventh grade looks out they are likely to be passed in the near future.

Here is a notice that strikes close to home.

The Karlstad High School has doubled its enrollmen during the past two years during which time the standard has been raised from that of an ungraded school with no high school department to that of an accredited graded and high school department. Supt. Joseph Dostal is on his third year in the school.

Communication

To the Editor of the News:

On account of sickness I have been unable to answer Mr. Fricker's letter that was published in the Holt Weekly News for January 13th, 1928. I see by his letter that Mr. Fricker has been asked by certain depositors of the old Holt State Bank to answer my communication published in your paper Jan. 6th, 1928. There is no question but what some of the depositors and officers of the old bank are satisfied, but on the other hand there are many of us who are very much disgusted with the way things were handled in the old bank.

Being a depositor of the Holt State Bank, I want to say, now that there seems to be no chance of getting a dividend for the general creditors, that the way things were run by the officers of the old bank was about as dirty a deal as it could be. If the officers had been the right type of men and got together, they could have avoided the closing of the old bank, in my opinion, or at least could have had the institution closed when the affairs of this bank were in such a deplorable condition.

As to the fat-salaried job I mentioned were received by the receivers in charge, I will say that my understanding was that the first receiver was paid a salary of $300.00 a month, which I consider quite fat. You state that failure of banks is due to irregularities of its officers. I want to say that legislation should be enacted to compel applicants for executive banking to appear before a board of experts and pass an examination before being admitted into the ranks of bankers. Before an attorney can begin the practice of law he must take an examination, and unless he be found qualified he cannot practice. The same is true with physicians, with engineers, with architects, with electricians, with plumbers—in fact, in almost every line wherein the public interests are concerned. The outstanding exception to this rule is the banker. Why should not he be required to take such an examination? I am not prepared to say just how this can be worked out, but I do believe that before a man is entitled to engage in the banking business he should be required to pass some sort of examination, one that would determine his fitness to manage a banking business.

Unless a man is a fairly good judge of human nature, has the ability to pass on credits, and has the backbone to say "No" occasionally—frequently—he has no business handling other people's money. The Holt State Bank was in a funny fix. I was told by a certain business man of Holt and an officer of the old bank that they wanted to close, but were advised by the State Banking Department, or Supt. R. B. Rathbun, who was superintendent of banks at that time, that the bank should remain open. I criticised the State Banking Department for allowing the bank to remain open when it was not solvent.

Examinations were made by bank examiners or investigators who did not know how to investigate, and gave reports that were mere fairy tales. Inexperienced examiners took a cursory look at the books and called them good, and in a short time the bank failed, with liabilities outrunning the assets three to one. The weak institution was nursed along under the mistaken idea on the part of the bank department that some miracle would happen and their solvency re-established. And as I stated before if the men in charge had gotten together when they saw the case was hopeless, the quicker the suspense was over, the better for all concerned.

I have a right to pass my opinion, and I want to say, who has a better right to know what is being done with the assets of a closed bank than the depositors?

Respectfully,
ANTON ANDERSON,
Arvilla, N. D.,

OIL ROUTS WOLF FROM RANCH DOOR

Owner Once Offered 26,000 Acres at $3 Each.

San Angelo, Texas.—The wolf of want that had pursued Ira G. Yates, aged ranchman, since he was a lad of twelve seemed very close last fall when Yates tried to sell his ranch at $3 an acre—and failed.

A mortgage of $90,000 hung over the property of the seventy-six-year-old ranch owner and he had hoped to meet this by selling his 26,000 acres and his cattle.

And now the land that Ira Yates could not sell has made him a millionaire. Engineers say that there are 275,00,000 barrels of oil under his land.

Yates liquidated the debt that had loomed so large merely by leasing a small part of his real estate to an oil company. Then he sat back and let the oil companies bid against each other for the drilling rights on the rest of the land—no longer the Yates ranch, but now the Yates oil field.

Cattle and sheep no longer roam over the mesas and through the ravines, for the old ranchman fears that an oil derrick might fall and kill some of the animals.

But he is a ranchman still. He has bought a ranch of 23,000 acres in central Texas and moved his herds there. There is no mortgage over the new ranch and he hopes that he never may be compelled to offer his property at $3 an acre.

"Creditors used to be after me for money," said Yates as he mused on the changes that have occurred. "Now a lot of people try to get money from me, but it's a different sort of demand."

This is the first time, he added, that he has been "ahead of the wolf" since he was left an orphan at the age of twelve.

34,000 Names Listed in British Who's Who

London.—Britain's Who's Who for 1928 contains 34,000 biographies, 2,000 more than in the 1927 edition. The volume, described by the publishers as "144 cubic inches of facts," is actually one-quarter inch thinner than last year's owing to a considerable reduction in the gauge of the paper. George Bernard Shaw and other prominent individuals retain their usual humorous paragraphs under the heading of "recreations."

Seek to Find Trace of "Lost" Indian Tribe

Washington.—Hope of uncovering traces of a "lost" tribe of Indians, the Calusa, which disappeared about 100 years ago after having played a dominant part in the history of southern Florida, is taking a Smithsonian institution expedition under Henry B. Collins, Jr., to that state to excavate newly-discovered mounds.

An account of a battle in 1513, in which 80 canoes filled with Calusa braves prevented Ponce de Leon from landing his forces along their coast, is history's earliest mention of the tribe. Records disclose that later the tribe acquired great wealth in gold from Spanish galleons wrecked off the coast.

The Calusas were known to have made human sacrifice of their captives, scalped and dismembered the bodies of their slain enemies, and have often been accused of cannibalism.

FORECASTS SMOKE ALONG WITH FROST

Lighting of Orchard Stoves Is Announced.

Washington.—The weather bureau's frost forecasting service in the Pacific coast fruit belt, which enables orchardists to light their oil heaters and save their crops, is being extended to "smoke" forecasting for the benefit of near by cities.

With the demonstration in recent years of the amazing accuracy of the frost forecasting service, which is maintained jointly by the weather bureau and the orchardists, confidence in the artificial heating of orchards has grown until now it is utilized on a tremendous scale.

In the citrus industries alone, which brings California $100,000,000 a year, 2,500,000 oil heaters are used to protect about 50,000 acres of orange and lemon trees. Although these heaters have been greatly improved in the last few years, they give off clouds of soot which, drifting into cities, cause anguish to housewives and financial loss to merchants.

Makes Best of Smoke.

Although thousands of suggestions have been made and numerous patents obtained, the records in the office of J. B. Kincer, chief of the division of agricultural meteorology of the weather bureau, show no satisfactory substitute for the oil heaters. So the new smoke forecasting service has been undertaken to make the best of what appears to be a necessary evil.

The frost and smoke forecasts are issued late in the day whenever dangerous temperatures are indicated and are distributed by telephone and radio in ample time to permit the orchardists to light their heaters.

Eight experts are employed in this forecasting, under the direction of F. D. Young, the meteorologist who began it single handed. They base their calculations on study of the regular daily weather map in conjunction with a hygrometric formula which takes into consideration local humidity and temperature conditions.

Proves Highly Accurate.

In one season, during which he issued 96 forecasts, Young has been within two degrees of accuracy 94 per cent of the time. Many of his warnings predicted low temperatures in terms of fractions—27½ degrees, for instance—and 68 of the 96 were precisely accurate, while 15 others were less than one degree away from the actual point at which the mercury stopped descending in the thermometer. His largest error in that year was five degrees, and that is one incident in his life which he finds it hard to forget.

Most of the cold snaps which threaten the California fruit crop develop when an area of low pressure moves out of Arizona or southern California and an era of high pressure from Nevada swings in. The frost forecasters remain in this region until the danger passes in February, and then they move north into the deciduous fruit section of Washington and Oregon.

Sand Turned Into Gems Before Spectators' Eyes

Paris.—With nothing of the faker characteristics about his demonstrations, George Claude, eminent French scientist, recently amazed an audience at Fountainebleau by turning a handful of sand into precious stones, turning iron into a state resembling melted chocolate, and after depriving flowers of their tints turning them into the consistency of glass.

M. Claude used no trickery to perform his wonderful transformations. Oxygen was the vehicle, and it bubbled in a tube on a table near him.

M. Claude explained many things to his audience; how the sea could be turned into many millions of pounds of horse-power; that water which boils is not necessarily burning; that little mounds of sand, by a single whiff of the blowpipe, could be changed into sapphires, rubies and topazes, and he predicted the time when it will be possible for men to walk on the bottom of the ocean minus the diver's equipment.

Finally, the scientist amazed his onlookers by turning their faces black by taking the red out of the sun's rays.

Man Without Country Wants Status Changed

Greensboro, N. C.—J. G. Scherf, former Concord business man, now residing in Andalusia, Ala., is a man without a country and is seeking naturalization in the Federal court here to unravel the tangle. His parents were native-born Americans, residents of California, but when Scherf was born they were residing in Germany. Scherf later came to this country, but supposed he was not a citizen, due to his foreign birth.

Some time ago he applied to the Federal court and asked for naturalization papers. When the facts were presented the papers were denied him on the ground that he was a child of American citizens and was a citizen himself in spite of his foreign birth. Last summer, however, Scherf wanted to attend the meeting of the Rotary International at Ostend, Belgium, and applied to Washington for a passport. It was refused him on the ground that he was not an American citizen. Now he is wondering just who he is and is again before the Federal court in an effort to establish his citizenry.

TO CIRCLE WORLD IN TWENTY DAYS

French Aeronautical Experts Say It Can Be Done.

Paris.—"Around the world in 20 days" will be practical in a few years, according to calculations of French aeronautic experts based on the numerous flights from Paris to the Far East accomplished in the last two years.

From a detailed examination of these flights it is apparent that the actual flying time over long distances was only a small part of the time taken, due to delays on the ground. Thus, Pelletier D'Oisy, who flew from Paris to Saigon, a distance of about 7,000 miles, in 18 days, lost three days at Karachi, India; another day at Agra and three more at Calcutta. The Americans, Brock and Schlee, flew from Paris to Rangoon, 6,300 miles, in ten days, having lost one day at Constantinople, owing to passport formalities.

Of course, none of these men flew at night. It is therefore deduced that, even at present, the Paris-Java flight, of a little more than 8,000 miles, can be made in seven days. As the circumference of the earth is 24,000 miles, the entire circuit could be made in three weeks. But for this it will be necessary to arrange the various "jumps," each of which would be made by a different machine with a fresh pilot.

The airplanes of 1927 are vastly superior to those of three years ago as far as the motors and radius of action are concerned, but the limit of human endurance has not varied. This is especially the case when it is a question of a constant effort over ten or more days.

As far as commercial flying has progressed it may be taken that 1,200 miles a day is the average distance possible. When special measures have been taken to make night flights safe the time for the world girdling flight will be appreciably diminished.

If Child Grows Fat, Consider Baby Rabbit!

New York.—Mothers who are appalled at the bean-stalk speed with which children seem to grow out of their clothes can be thankful that little boys do not sprout up as fast as rabbits, cows and guinea pigs.

Charts comparing the growth of children with that of animals have been worked out by Dr. Samuel Brody of the Missouri agricultural experiment station. Reporting his results in Science Magazine, Doctor Brody shows that a child between four and fourteen years of age grows at the rate of only 10 per cent a year. Reduced to days, this means that in less than four days the young animal gains as much as the child gains in a year.

The juvenile period in man spreads over an enormously long period of time compared with that in domestic animals Doctor Brody states.

Children who have not grown fast between four and twelve years often shoot up rapidly between twelve and fifteen. This appears to be in the nature of compensatory growth for an earlier deficiency, Doctor Brody concludes. Children who have grown more rapidly in earlier childhood do not seem to have this acceleration in their teens.

Dog Aids Dope Thefts Running Up to $50,000

Philadelphia.—A "drug-sniffing" dog, which is said to have led its masters to $50,000 worth of narcotics, jogged into a trap laid by police recently and its owner and his pal were captured.

Detectives said that scores of druggists had been robbed by the man with the dog. According to the authorities, the dog and his master would saunter into the drug store and the man would order a soda. Suddenly the canine would yelp and dart to the rear of the store. The man would run after him and would loot the store of all the narcotics in sight before he left.

Complaint by a West Philadelphia druggist that the trick had been worked in his store during the last few months every time he left a new clerk in charge led to the arrest of Edward Seay, owner of the dog, and Thomas Gilmore, alleged "lookout."

Listen! That's Your Goldfish Raising Din

East Lansing, Mich.—If any care to know, they may find out how much noise a goldfish makes when it swims about in its glass bowl. The answer to the puzzle, which may or may not have worried folks for years, was given at the electrical show at Michigan State college during Farmers' week here.

Visitors were able to detect the slightest noise made by a goldfish as it swam around in its medium, which is noted for its lack of privacy. Detection was made possible by the principle of radio control.

Another new feature of the show this year was a radio-controlled car. The principle also will be worked out in relation to door bells. A receiving set recorded the rings from a sending set in another room through a special relay system

Out of the World

By CLARISSA MACKIE

ANN BEEBE waited, a cool, quiet, capable little thing, while Mr. Wentworth signed the letters. He never noticed that a spirit of dissatisfaction dwelt in her large brown eyes, nor did he even remotely guess that his secretary was unhappy. But deep in Ann's lonely heart was a wish that she could get away from the noisy city.

Ann managed a smile at her charming reflection in the mirror. "If I only had some relatives—if I only belonged to somebody!" she told herself rebelliously as she went down in the elevator to the street.

Ann never knew what prompted her to get on the Fairfield car that had stopped at the corner. She sank comfortably into one of the forward-facing seats and looked from the window as the car passed until at last they drew near Fairfield. Ann loved the charming houses with their fresh green lawns. The car stopped many times along this way and then it went on into the golden June of countryside. It was then that Ann yielded to temptation and got out at a quiet green corner and walked slowly along a pleasant country lane.

She was pretending that she was going home!

Suddenly something happened—Ann could never have told you how it happened that she did not see the deep hole that some children had made in the path that day nor how it was to affect her destiny—she came to a rise in the path and continuing her way stepped directly into the deep excavation. Her pretty, high-heeled shoe twisted and wrenched her ankle into agonizing pain, and she sank half fainting on the path.

It was half an hour later that some one came along and found her there—some one big and broad shouldered, with a merry, sun-browned face under the flopping sun hat. He was dressed in khaki shirt and overalls and one shapely brown hand carried a rack over his shoulder. He bent over Ann and lifted her easily and when he found her eyes were closed and that one foot was wedged into the hole, he guessed the truth, and hurried toward the house of the chimneys.

"Telephone to the doctor, Mrs. Raynor," he said to the housekeeper who came out to meet him. "How about your sitting room upstairs?"

"Of course, Mr. Peter! Put her on the broad couch and I will bring some hot water with me."

It was not until after the doctor had been there and bound up the badly sprained ankle that Ann Beebe opened her lovely eyes and looked at them with blank surprise.

"What—what is the matter? Why, where am I?" she questioned.

The doctor answered her inquiries. "You were crossing Peter Larkin's field when you stepped into a hole and sprained your ankle. Mrs. Raynor, who is Mr. Larkin's housekeeper, will take good care of you for a week or so, unless your people could come for you with a car. Of course Mr. Larkin could take you home if you wish.

"I live in a boarding house—and I have no people—only good friends," admitted Ann. "But really, I should not intrude here—and if Mr. Larkin will kindly drive me to the boarding house, I will be quite all right."

"Then you must stay right with us," said Peter Larkin's deep pleasant voice. "Mrs. Raynor will be delighted to have you to take care of and Doctor MacFee will be glad to come and see you every day. The country air will be good for you. What say, Mrs. Raynor—doctor?"

"Of course she must stay here," decided the housekeeper in a motherly way, and when the doctor added his approval, Ann accepted gracefully. Mrs. Raynor went downstairs to telephone to the boarding house and to tell the landlady to pack some of Ann's clothes and send them out by a messenger, while a trim maid prepared a dainty supper for the girl who had so strangely appeared.

That night Ann slept in a dainty room that opened out of Mrs. Raynor's own bedroom, and it was late before she finally sank into slumber so delicious was the contact with people who seemed like one's family! Mrs. Raynor had gossiped a little and told Ann that Peter Larkin was a lawyer in the city. He lived alone with his housekeeper in this charming old place that he had inherited from an aunt and they often had guests, when the place was full of music and activity.

The next morning Ann had a little fever and the ankle was very painful. The doctor came and ministered to her and she was feeling better at noon when Peter Larkin brought her luncheon tray and waited upon her deftly. Afterward, he read to her and Ann went right off to sleep, awakening to a delightful sense of being taken care of.

Mr. Wentworth, her employer, sent her a basket of fruit and flowers and some of her friends came to see her, but wise Mrs. Raynor smiled to herself those days because she knew that handsome Peter Larkin had at last lost his heart to this little brown-eyed girl who had "no home and no people."

And Ann? She was the happiest girl in the world when Peter asked her to be his wife. "Now," said Ann, her head on his shoulder, "now, I really belong!"

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation.

When people point out your faults, cheerfully admit them. Then, they'll almost apologize.

STORY FROM THE START

Handsome, fastidious and wealthy—young St. Croix Creighton awaits his sweetheart at their trysting place. She is late, this ordinary little Pennsylvania Dutch girl, Meely Schwenckton. Despite her seeming innocence and ignorance, she succeeds in keeping him at a distance, to his chagrin. Meely, in the Schwenckton home, where she is boarding, is altogether unlike the girl who meets St. Croix clandestinely. She is the teacher in the neighborhood school, of which Marvin Creighton, St. Croix' brother, is superintendent. Meely learns that Marvin was to have married his cousin, a titled English lady, but, believing she was attracted by the Creighton wealth, had refused the alliance. It is the rumor that St. Croix is to take Marvin's place and marry the English girl. St. Croix' jealousy is aroused by Meely's report of an aged suitor for her hand. The girl cleverly decoys him into admitting he has no intention of marrying her. Marvin visits school in his official capacity as superintendent and discovers how shockingly little Meely knows about school teaching. Mr. Schwenckton, coming home from town, picks up a stranger, and finding his watch gone, demands the stranger get out and turn over his watch.

"I've been held up on the road and robbed!" he announced, his voice weak with fatigue. "May I use your phone to report to the police?"

A stunned silence on the part of the four occupants of the kitchen met this statement and request—Meely staring with wide-open eyes, her hand pressed to her fast-beating heart; Nettie's face going first red, then pale; Mr. Schwenckton trembling and pallid; Susie unmoved.

But it was Susie who broke their stupid silence. "So you see, Sam, he ain't still runnin'!"

A little hysterical squeal of laughter from Meely brought the young man's eyes around to where she stood by the table—clad in a kimono, her hair down her back in a braid. She was glad she was not dressed normally, for in her tailored school suit with her hair done up around her head, she was so transformed from the country bumpkin of her voile frock trimmed with artificial flowers and streaming ribbons that the extreme contrast would have betrayed her hopelessly as a masquerader.

For the man leaning exhausted against the kitchen door was St. Croix Creighton.

"How did you get here so soon?" quavered Mr. Schwenckton, too absorbed in his own quandary to see the flash of startled recognition with which his visitor's eyes met Meely's. She had succeeded, at an instant's notice, in assuming the look of bovine dullness which had so effectually disguised her ever since she had known him.

"Am I—is this Sam Schwenckton's farm?" exclaimed the amazed young man. "I'd no idea where I was, the road's so pitch dark! I've been groping my way for a half hour to find a house where I could telephone. That," pointing to the lamp, "was the first light I saw in five miles!"

"No, not five—not more'n two," Mr. Schwenckton's shaking voice corrected him.

"How do you know? Is this Mr. Schwenckton?" asked St. Croix, for the farmer, without his coat and hat and necktie, did not suggest to him his automobile companion of an hour ago.

"It is," Mr. Schwenckton heavily admitted. "And you, now that I see you in the light, I rekonize as the younger Mr. Creighton! Yi, yi, yi, yi!"

"Yes, I am in a mess!" responded St. Croix, interpreting the farmer's exclamation as an expression of sympathy for his plight. "May I use your—"

"If it's only your watch you want, it ain't no need to phone. Here it is!" Mr. Schwenckton, with shamed, averted face, held it out to its owner.

St. Croix, amazed, took it. "You caught the thief? But how? Do tell me! I never was more taken in! He seemed the most harmless, kindly old simpleton—"

This time it was Nettie who gave a little hysterical squeal which brought the young man's eyes, for an instant, to her rosy, eager face.

"Meely!" Mr. Schwenckton appealed, "you tell him how it was! Me, I couldn't get the words together for to explain such a bewilderment!"

Meely was appalled. The Schwencktons were accustomed to hear her speak good English; St. Croix had of course never heard her talk anything but the Pennsylvania Dutch dialect!

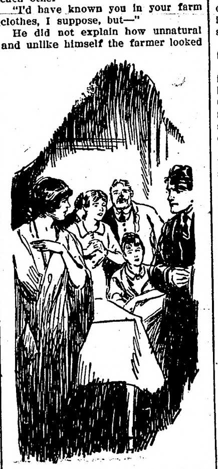
"Nettie," she murmured, "you tell him!"

Nettie, shy, but all too willing to hold the young god's attention upon herself, eagerly assumed the task of explaining her poor father's unfortunate mistake—and before she was half through her narrative, they were all laughing except Susie; and even she was feebly smiling.

"What gets me pupplexed," said Mr. Schwenckton amazedly, "is that me and you, Mr. Creighton, neighbors since you was born a'ready, though five miles apart and not seeing each other often (I ain't really laid eyes on you since you was a college boy, except to pass each other in our cars)—but that us we could ride together near eight miles yet and not rekonize each other—"

"I'd have known you in your farm clothes, I suppose, but—"

He did not explain how unnatural and unlike himself the farmer looked to him in his "store suit" with a collar and necktie on.



"I've Been Held Up on the Road and Robbed," He Announced, His Voice Weak With Fatigue.

"It's a good thing we're neighbors that know each other or this here thing mightn't look so funny, but wery serious!" Mr. Schwenckton gravely opined.

"I didn't know," St. Croix said suddenly, when Mr. Schwenckton's abject apologies had been accepted, "that you had three daughters, Mr. Schwenckton; I thought you had only two."

"You thought right—I got only two."

"Oh," St. Croix nodded, "then this young lady isn't your daughter?" His nod indicated Nettie, but as she and Meely were standing together, Mr. Schwenckton misunderstood him.

"No, she's only a distant cousin, come to school to teach here."

"Teach? Why, she looks too young! You can't tell, these days, can you, how old girls are?"

Meely realized that his look of amazement, almost of consternation, was not at all for Nettie's youth as a teacher, but for the awful English with which the children of the district must be instructed!

Nettie was delighted that no one but herself, as she supposed, perceived his mistake, for it was wonderful to have Mr. St. Croix Creighton think her old enough and "smart" enough to be a school teacher! Thankful she was indeed that Meely didn't speak in and claim the honor.

It was obvious to Meely that St. Croix was even more concerned than she was that neither he nor she should by look or word reveal to this family the relation in which they stood.

Mr. Schwenckton offered, now, to get out his car again and take Mr. Creighton home, but the young man protested that if they would allow him to telephone home, one of the Beechlands chauffeurs would be here in a short time with a runabout.

While he was telephoning, Mr. Schwenckton ordered Nettie to make some strong hot coffee and get out some doughnuts and pie.

But what, Meely wondered, would St. Croix think of the teacher's being asked to do this instead of the daughter of the house? She considered swiftly what would be her best course to avert suspicion on both sides. To get across the kitchen to the stairway and run up to her room? Mr. Schwencken would be bound to stop her and insist that she stay and have coffee and doughnuts with them, and if he spoke to her at all, St. Croix would notice how differently he addressed her and Nettie. To remain here, however, was more certain to invite exposure. And yet, she was afraid to go away for fear of what might come out in her absence.

Nettie, as she bustled about making coffee and setting out cups and saucers, saw, with keen chagrin, how Mr. Creighton's eyes kept turning toward Meely and never in her direction. And the expression on his face—furtive, hungry, infatuated! Was this, Nettie wondered, a case of love on sight? She was greatly puzzled, for in her opinion Meely "looked a mess" in that sloppy kimono and with a "plait" down her back.

As Mr. Creighton hung up the receiver, there was a quick movement in the room—Meely making for the stairs.

"Ach, Meely—" began Mr. Schwenckton.

"Good night," she interrupted, rushing up the steps before he could stop her—but not before she caught in St. Croix' eyes the evidence of the conflict in his mind—a passionate protest against her going, mingled with a fear of her presence.

Upstairs in her own room, while she prepared for bed, she had the exciting suspense of wondering whether they were talking about her; whether St. Croix had noticed the kimono she had on, a Japanese embroidered silk thing that a county school teacher would hardly own if she were what she should be! Yes, this kimono could be a "give-away."

"Well, when this sort of thing could happen it was evident that she could not much longer keep up her farce. She must bring things to a climax as soon as possible; beguile St. Croix to lay his cards on the table; force his hand for a show-down.

The sound of the cabinet organ in the parlor below her bedroom, and Nettie's shrill voice singing, interrupted her thoughts. Nettie was invariably called upon by her father to entertain "company" with her musical accomplishments of organ and voice, and of course such distinguished company as Mr. St. Croix Creighton would have to be favored. Through Nettie's lungs and fingers the entire family found their one and only artistic expression.

CHAPTER V

At breakfast next morning Meely warily watched the faces around the table for signs of newly awakened suspicions of herself. But she found nothing unusual in the demeanor of the family.

Nettie chattered excitedly about the elegance and "swellness" of Mr. Creighton's stylish clothes, his wonderful white hands, the way he said his words—"He says 'hoff' for half! It sounds awful pretty and genteel that way! And, ach, the manners he's got! The way he held my chair for me to set! Say!"—it beggared words.

"But I always say," her father spoke in, "that I don't think so much of manners—morals is so much more important."

"Gimme manners!" Nettie defiantly affirmed her choice.

"Morals and manners," said Meely, "can go hand in hand—they're not mutually exclusive!"

Meely had often noticed that her use of a word of more than two syllables invariably awed the family into a prolonged silence.

She broke the present lull by broaching a subject to Mr. Schwenckton that was weighing on her mind. "How often do county superintendents visit a school, Mr. Schwenckton?"

"Ach, about once in so often."

"Yes, but how often?"

"Not so wery often. Now and then."

"But I mean," Meely patiently explained, "how far apart are 'now and then.'?"

"Well, pretty far apart. You see, he's got too many to wisit to come often. And the schools is spread over so much area that it takes up time to go to and from."

In Splendor, Venice Surpassed All Cities

In Venice of the Sixteenth century luxury and splendor surpassed all bounds; never before at any time nor in any city were religious ceremonies, victories, the conclusion of peace, the visits of foreigners, or the marriages of illustrious persons, celebrated with greater pomp and magnificence. Those in the occupations of cloth makers and drapers reaped huge fortunes, for on nearly every gala occasion miles of rich new fabric were used and visitors to the city were rendered speechless by the matchless spectacle. There was a great rivalry among the nobles to see who could appear in the processions in the most expensive robe of gold and velvet, while the richness and the hangings from balcony and carpets spread for the feet of the hour's hero strove to make themselves seen among the profusion of flowers, the countless flashing candles and the play of color. When some magnificent occasion of this sort was not in progress Venice was not permitted to be dull for a moment—there was always some carnival of merrymakers on the streets and masquerades were so common they became a nuisance and met with decrees forbidding them.—Detroit News.

LET US EAT FOR HEALTH

The willowy figures of today are being sustained at the cost of health in thousands of our young girls. The ordinary girl of eighteen to twenty-five or even thirty is slim enough naturally, without starving or dieting in any unreasonable degree.

To subject one to all sorts of diseases and breakdowns in order to keep the figure curveless and flat is actually criminal. We need food to build up waste tissue, supply heat and energy for the activities of the body.

When the body is twenty to thirty pounds overweight it may be advisable to shorten our rations and exercise more. A little less of sweets, pastry and starchy foods will be advisable and one feels better, more fit and ambitious.

For the family menus the following rules, according to Doctor McCollum of Johns Hopkins, will enable you to balance your diet and keep your health:

1—Build up the daily menus around a quart of milk for each member of the family. This does not necessarily mean that it should be used as a beverage, but in foods as well.

2—Use eggs and meat frequently, but not excessively.

3—Serve salads twice a day to insure such raw vegetable foods as fruits, tomatoes, celery, lettuce, onions and so forth appearing regularly in the menu.

4—Serve one leafy vegetable, such as beet tops, kale, spinach and so forth each day.

He further adds, if you meet these requirements you can eat whatever else you desire.

Proper mastication has a large part in health. Food that is not well divided and mixed with the saliva is not in condition to be taken care of by the stomach and intestinal juices. Improperly masticated food overburdens the stomach and causes all sorts of ills.

The average person gives little thought to health until he begins to lose it. After middle age one should eat more carefully, chosing those foods easy of digestion and assimilation. The practice of riding everywhere instead of walking, is responsible for much of overweight. Eat less, work more and exercise much is the best of advice for those who are passing the half-century mark. Our diet is largely responsible for the length of our days and our health. With health, one may get much enjoyment from life, even in humble surroundings, but lack of health finds the wealthy miserable and unhappy.

Seasonable Dishes.

Those who enjoy oysters will like the following very popular dish:

Pan - Roasted Oysters. — Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add one-half cupful catsup, one tablespoonful of worcestershire sauce, one-eighth of a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Add one and one-half tablespoonfuls of flour to a little milk, then add a cupful, and let boil up. Add to the first mixture, stirring slowly. Turn in a pint of drained oysters and let them cook until the edges curl. Serve on very hot buttered toast.

Raisin and Sour Cream Pie.—Take four eggs beaten until light, yolks and whites separately, add one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cupful of sugar, two cupfuls of raisins with two cupfuls of sour cream to the beaten egg yolks. Stir in the well beaten whites and bake in an uncooked pastry shell. One may cook the mixture, pour into a baked shell and use the whites with some of the sugar for a meringue.

Cheese Pastry.—Take two cupfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one cupful of shortening with one-fourth pound of cream cheese. Cream the shortening and cheese together, then mix into the flour. Add enough cold water to mix and roll. Place in the ice chest to become thoroughly chilled over night. When ready to use roll very thin on a floured board and bake in tarts or in a pie tin, fluting the edge. Fill with:

Lemon Sponge.—Beat two egg yolks until light, add one cupful of milk. Mix one cupful of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of flour and one-half teaspoonful of salt and stir into the first mixture. Add one tablespoonful of melted shortening and fold in the stiffly beaten whites after adding the grated rind and juice of a lemon. Pour into the baked shell and bake until firm.

A good way to keep baked potatoes palatable for a late comer is to break them open and let out the steam, then put back in the oven. They will keep nicely for twenty minutes.

West deals and finds that he cannot bid because his five-card suit does not contain three sure tricks and his hand does not have two quick tricks. He passes and North and East pass also. South as fourth hand realizes that he should not make an original bid without an especially strong hand—one that gives promise of going game—but he has three suits protected and four and a half quick tricks. As the probable tricks are obtained by doubling the quick trick values this would make nine probable tricks or game, so he bids one no trump after which all pass.

Senior leads the fourth best of his long suit, the seven of clubs. Dummy is spread on the table, and declarer looks over the two hands to estimate the number of probable tricks and lay out a campaign for the play.

The application of the rule of eleven shows him that junior holds two clubs above the seven, and that if senior has five clubs junior must hold three. One of junior's must be an honor because if senior held King, Queen, Jack he would have led the King. The diamond finesse, if taken, must be made towards senior. If it loses and senior has five clubs he will make four of them, which with the diamond trick will prevent game. Declarer has four sure tricks in spades, one in diamonds and one in clubs, and can get three in hearts even if that finesse towards junior fails provided junior has at that time no club to lead. Therefore declarer decides not to try the diamond finesse but to hold up his Ace of clubs until the third round and then finesse the hearts. Having analyzed the hand in this way he proceeds promptly and plays as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	C7	C2	CQ	C4
2	CJ	C10	C8	C5
3	CK	D7	C6	CA
4	H2	H8	HK	HQ
5	D2	D9	D5	DA
6	H5	HA	H3	HJ
7	H7	H10	H4	D6
8	S4	H9	H6	D8
9	S6	S3	S2	SA
10	S8	S5	S7	SK
11	C3	SQ	S9	SJ
12	C9	S10	D3	DJ
13	DK	D10	D4	DQ

Declarer Secures three odd tricks.

At trick 5 East leads diamonds because that suit is dummy's greatest weakness and South promptly puts on the Ace, because he has decided not to take that finesse. At tricks 6 and 11 declarer overtakes his own tricks in order to leave the lead where he wants it.

The points to be studied in this deal are: (1) making the preliminary survey; (2) holding up the Ace of adversary's suit; (3) refusing to take a tempting finesse towards an adversary holding established cards.

When dummy contains a long suit of Ace and five small cards and no entry in any other suit, and declarer holds King and two small ones of dummy's long suit, a situation is presented which many players fail to handle properly. The adversaries hold four of that suit and if they are evenly divided declarer can establish the suit by leading the King, following with a small card and winning with the Ace in dummy; but if the adverse cards are divided 3-1 the suit would be blocked on the third round and declarer would get only two tricks from it. This is too great a risk to run, thus the proper way to play this combination is to lead the King, then follow with a small card and play low from dummy (called ducking) giving the adversaries the second trick. When declarer again gets the lead he leads his last small one to dummy's Ace and makes the three remaining small cards good, taking five tricks in the suit. Such a suit should be led early in the game before the adversaries have any established cards to play when they are allowed to take the trick.

Religion Bows to Hunting

When the news comes to a church full of Faroe Islanders that whales have been sighted man, woman and child drop everything and run. The Islanders depend very largely on the whales for their winter supply of meat fat and oil.

The Faroe Islanders are a very religious race and so a messenger goes to the church, opens the door quietly and whispers "Grindabund" to the nearest man. He, in turn, whispers to his neighbor and tiptoes softly from the church, and so the message is passed on to all who are to take part in the drive.

Generally, the pastor shortens the service and often goes, too, but when the sacrament is being administered no message is sent to the church. No man would leave the Lord's table to join in a grind. Should he dare to do so, no blessing would follow him or his.—The Forum

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Annie Kwinski of 526 1st Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., writes that she became so weak and run-down that she was not able to do her housework. She saw the name Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the paper and said to her husband, "I will try that medicine and see if it will help me." She says she took six bottles and is feeling much better.

Mrs. Mattie Adams, who lives in Downing Street, Brewton, Ala., writes as follows: "A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and since taking it I feel like a different woman."

With her children grown up, the middle-aged woman finds time to do the things she never had time to do before—read the new books, see the new plays, enjoy her grand-children, take an active part in church and civic affairs. Far from being pushed aside by the younger set, she finds a full, rich life of her own. That is, if her health is good.

Thousands of women past fifty, say they owe their vigor and health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and are recommending it to their friends and neighbors.

The wise farmer never harrows the feelings of his wife.

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of plain Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic; constipation; diarrhea; or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: it is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE LOVER'S HAIR

HERE is a superstition of very ancient date which still exists in some rural districts of the United States and Canada, as well as in England and Continental Europe. When a girl hears the first call of the robin in the spring, let her take off her shoe and stocking from the left foot and if, upon turning the stocking inside out, she finds a hair in the heel of it, it will be of the same color as the hair of her future husband. In countries where the wearing of shoes and stockings is not so common as here the investigator need merely look to see if hair is clinging to her left heel. In one section down South they say this experiment in divination should be tried when the call of the first turtle-dove is heard, and in England it is the first cuckoo. In Westphalia, Germany, it is at the sight of the first swallow that the peasant looks to see if there is a hair under the foot. But in its essence the superstition is the same on both sides of the Atlantic and in all sections. In it are the survival of several ancient ideas. In the direction that the divination be tried when the note of the bird which is the harbinger of spring is heard, we see the idea of an appeal to Demeter, the goddess of vegetation—of that vegetation the resuscitation of which is just beginning. But Demeter was also the patroness of marriage and, therefore a proper goddess for the curious maiden to appeal to in such matters. It has been shown how the moon-goddess when appealed to upon like matters shows the maiden her future husband in a dream. But Demeter answers the prayer of her votary by showing the maiden a hair of her future husband's head. And it has already been stated how closely related, how almost identical—the ancients conceived a man and his hair to be, even when the two were severed.

EVERYDAY MEALS

IS CORN MEAL being used enough in our family menus? We need more coarse foods and there are so many appetizing dishes prepared from corn meal which the whole family may enjoy.

Aristocratic Johnny Cake.

Soften two tablespoonfuls of butter, add the beaten yolks of four eggs, one pint of milk and one cupful each of flour and corn meal, one-half teaspoonful of salt, four teaspoonfuls of sugar. Mix well and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Bake forty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve hot. Half of this recipe will be sufficient for a small family.

Corn Meal Muffins.

Pour one-half cupful of boiling water over one-half cupful of corn meal, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, then cover and let stand one hour. Sift two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and one-half cupful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt; add to the corn meal mixture with one egg beaten light and one-half cupful of milk; mix well and bake in well buttered gem pans about twenty minutes.

Spoon Bread.

Take one cupful each of corn meal, cooked rice and boiling water, scald the meal with the water and cover tightly for a half hour. Add two cupfuls of sweet milk, two beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Bake in a serving dish which may be placed on the table.

Date Corn Meal Pudding.

Scald a pint of milk and pour it over one-half cupful of meal, add one tablespoonful of butter, one cupful of chopped dates and two eggs. Turn into a baking dish and bake until of the consistency of custard. Serve with hard sauce.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

A "CATSPAW"

"THEY can't make a catspaw out of me," is a way of saying that one will not be used as a tool to do an unpleasant job to serve some one else's purpose.

The word "catspaw" has a legitimate meaning in the parlance of the sea. It is the nautical term to describe the light air which ruffles the surface of the water in patches during a calm. Frequently heralding a storm, this "catspaw" is said to have been named from the fact that certain frolics of the cat will indicate to an experienced seaman the approach of a gale.

It is not from its nautical significance, however, that the term has found a place in modern slang. For the origin of its use as a synonym for "dupe" or "tool" we must turn to the old fable of the monkey who wanted to get some roasted chestnuts out of the fire, but did not want to burn his fingers in the hot ashes. To serve his purpose he used the cat's paw. And the cat knew better the next time.

WE'VE SOLD THE CAR

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE'VE sold the car,
A good old friend,
The good old car
Is at an end.
Some other hand
Will have the fun,
And try to make
The old car run.

We've traded in
The good old car,
For that's the way
That people are.
Old age had come,
And youth had gone,
And so we passed
The old car on.

It seems unkind,
It seems unfair,
But that's the way
That friendships wear.
Yet none can say
We did not praise
It even in
Its saddest days.

Yes, if you think
We did not claim
We loved the old
Car still the same,
And swear it was
As good as new,
Then ask the man
We sold it to.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

BACK TO METHUSELAH

BERNARD SHAW, the Irish dramatist and paradoxical philosopher, in his book "Getting Back to Methuselah," puts forward the theory that human beings could live a thousand years, or even three thousand years, if they had a mind to.

He points out that nobody has ever explained why a parrot should live ten times as long as a dog, while a turtle is almost immortal.

On the other hand, he contends that even the cleverest and most experienced of men are mere children when they die.

So he comes to the conclusion that among the matters apparently changeable at will is the duration of the individual life.

He calls the great Weismann as a witness.

That biologist pointed out that death was not an eternal condition of life, but an expedient introduced to provide for continual renewal of the race without overcrowding.

Men, according to Mr. Shaw, don't live long enough for the simple reason that they have made up their minds to decay and die at a certain time.

But if a race has the power to make a mistake, it also has the power to remedy it.

So that if man now fixes the term of his existence, say at three score years and ten, there is no reason why he should not fix it at three hundred or three thousand. He might even go further and place a "circumstantial selection limit."

That is to say he would go on living until some fatal accident would put an end to him.

The Shaw theory, whether it is to be taken seriously or not, is in curious contradiction to that put forward by Sir William Osler, the celebrated Canadian physician, some years ago.

He held, in spite of all the evidence to the contrary, that a man never did any really original work after forty, and should be put in a lethal chamber at sixty.

This did not prevent Osler from resigning his chair at Johns Hopkins in 1904, when he was fifty-five, and accepting the Regius Professorship of Medicine at Oxford.

The success which he achieved in that place ought to have caused him a great deal of worry because it destroyed his own theory of human utility.

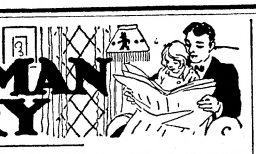
The SANDMAN STORY



THE MIGHTY MOOSE

"GREATEST of all the members of the deer family," said the Sandman, "is the moose. He is the most splendid of all the deer in the great wide world and he is splendid in looks and in strength and in brains.

"The moose is called Mooswa in Indian talk, which means wood eater. For the moose love strange things to eat, you see.

"Sometimes the timber wolves fight this mighty monarch, but oh, the moose is brave and few can win a victory over him.

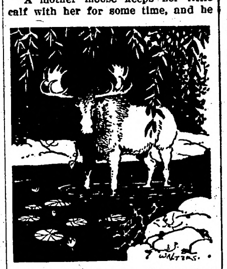
"As you know, he loves the great northern parts of the country and he loves the woods and the quiet streams away from people.

"If he has been taught from a baby moose to be with people he is not afraid.

"But he is not anxious to take any chances if he has not been used to people. For to him people are creatures with guns and guns cannot be fought against.

"The moose is very tall when he is full grown. He is brownish gray in color and he runs very quickly. The baby moose is only seventy-five pounds in weight when born, which isn't much considering that later on a moose becomes so enormous.

"A mother moose keeps her little calf with her for some time, and he follows her about, walking everywhere after her, though once in a while she leaves him covered up in the thick woods while she goes off marketing by herself.



"Mooswa Lived in a Low Swamp Near a Wooded River."

"If the baby moose is a boy she is very careful that his father shall not see him, for a father moose is very jealous of a little boy in the family, fearing the boy may become a greater moose than he is.

"It is when the boy is but a baby, too, that the father is so jealous, and so the mother keeps them separated so that her darling baby moose will not be killed by its father.

"But the moose I am going to tell you about was named Mooswa the Great.

"He had lived and roamed the woods where it was cold and wild, but still where people came, more and more every year, with great guns to hunt the moose family.

"Many members of his family had been moving farther and farther north. They were brave, but they did not want to take any chances and they did not consider guns fair enemies somehow.

"So they had left and Mooswa the Great had few companions or even few relatives in his neighborhood.

"Mooswa lived in a low swamp near a wooded river and there the willow twigs, which Mooswa loved so dearly, were delicious. These were fine in the winter time and in the autumn.

"Into the heart of the great king of animals had come love, and he wondered if the beautiful Miss Moose, whom he had seen and admired would become his mate.

"So he went, his great heart beating foolishly, to see Miss Moose and he told her of his love.

"'I so wish you would do me the great honor to become my mate,' he said.

"'It would make me so happy to wander with you through this winter which is now approaching. We could travel far, we could see so much. Perhaps we could go farther north, where the guns are fewer and yet where still there are willow swamps.

"'We could see so much of the great forest world and of the deep underbrush lands.'

"Miss Moose had for some time admired Mooswa the Great. She had admired every bit of his splendid twelve hundred pounds of moose strength and beauty and when she heard his splendid voice making love to her it was all she could do to keep from crying—so happy was she.

"So off went Mooswa the Great with his bride. He shed his shovel-like antlers in the early winter and began growing new ones, but all the time they wandered through the snow, farther north where guns would not put an end to their happiness."

For Meditation

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH MY EDUCATION?

WHAT shall I do with my education? What college graduate has not asked the question? The four long years of study are an experience of the past. What am I going to do with it?

If a college course is of any value it surely should enable one to discover one's adaptability for definite kinds of work. When this is not true, young men and women frequently choose a life's work at the point of least resistance. A passing fancy may influence the decision, leaving the tragedy of the mistake to be discovered later.

Certainly a more tragic condition cannot be imagined than when a man trained as a physician realizes at the age of forty-five that he has made a mistake and should have been trained to be an engineer. To be compelled for economic reasons to give one's life to a work in which one has no vital and enthusiastic interest is anything but a happy experience.

Why not determine a life's work before going to college. The early choice is most likely to be the right one. Procuring an education is not a difficult task. To decide the purpose of an education is far more difficult, especially if that decision is postponed beyond the adolescent years.

Is a college education a benefit in the business world? This question is asked, on the average, by at least eight out of every ten young men and women. The seriousness with which the question is discussed is indicative of a desire on the part of young people to make the best possible preparation for life's venture.

The question cannot be answered categorically. To some persons it may be a detriment, to others a great advantage.

The answer depends upon the person who asks it.

Growth of Hair

When the individual is in good physical condition and the scalp is in good condition, the hair should grow from three-eighths to three-fourths of an inch a month until it has reached the length of 12 to 14 inches, when its rate of growth is reduced one-half. Hair grows faster in warm weather than in cold, and during the daytime rather than the night.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

TAKING IT EASY

FOR the last three weeks I have been stopping at a large hotel in a semitropical country.

All sorts of people, chiefly elderly people, are gathered here.

Their idea in coming to this climate is to lengthen their lives—and some of them do it.

But a more bored, fretful, impatient collection of people I have never seen.

* * *

They come here year after year, arriving about the time that it gets cold in the regions where they live in summer, and departing as soon as the frosts have gone away at home.

There are remarkable islands, piled up by the sea, just off the shore, and made almost wholly of coral sand, or sand composed of disintegrated shells.

There are palm trees of many varieties, and inland are clear rivers, rising from springs which come from no one knows where. In these rivers are many varieties of fish and shell fish, and on their banks are turtles and alligators.

But the people at this hotel know nothing and care nothing about coral formations, or palm growths, or the action of the sea.

* * *

They are for the most part people of little reading and little thought, and unless there is something arranged for their entertainment all the time they are miserable.

When cheap picture shows, such as they would never go to see at home come to the nearby village, they throng to see them.

A man with a road machine at work on a highway nearby atracted thirty or forty of them and kept them interested a whole morning.

Those who can play golf, do play much more than they need for exercise, and more than is really good for them.

They are really people to be pitied.

They have abundant wealth in money, but not enough intellectual wealth to enable them really to enjoy taking it easy.

They have labored long—some of them—to gain fortunes, and now that the fortunes are in hand, they can buy nothing with them which they really want.

* * *

Here at the hotel also is a college professor, whose health is broken, and who has enough means to stay here for a couple of months.

Out of the country round he gets a world of information and entertainment.

He is out all day looking at wonders of nature not to be found in his own locality, and soaking in health with the sunshine.

He would be happy anywhere, for he has learned how to take it easy—he has that kind of a mind.

No man who does not how to take it easy and get recreation out of it, ever ought to retire from the business he knows and understands and enjoys.

Were Easy Prey for Rosary Trick

Gullible Yanks in Paris Fall Victims to Unique Swindle.

Paris.—So obvious that one would think even a sixteen-year-old boy wouldn't fall for it, the "Rosary trick" is netting for the hundred or more crooks practicing it in France at least $1,000,000 a year. It seems incredible that business men, shrewd lawyers—in one case a district attorney of an American state—clergymen, and seasoned travelers knowingly hand over to a chance acquaintance pocketbooks with anything from one to $25,000 and wait for him to bring back the money, but the facts are there.

How is it done? Here is a typical example and one is enough because the setting is always the same. A young Philadelphia business man came to Paris with his wife and started out to see the sights.

Find the Rosary.

In the Champs-Elysees, after visiting the tomb of the Unknown Soldier under the Arc de Triomphe, they were greeted by a soft spoken gentleman whom they had met a few weeks previously in London, calling himself Francis Arthur Barclay. Renewal of acquaintanceship was made over a cup of tea in one of the hotels of the Parisian Fifth avenue.

Strolling in the late afternoon down the famous thoroughfare they noticed a tall, distinguished looking man drop a rosary. Barclay picked it up and handed it to the stranger who thanked him and then hearing a few words which the Philadelphian addressed to his wife, said:

"Why, I'm really glad to meet people who talk my own language. Let me introduce myself. I am Patrick O'Hara of Sydney, Australia. You know, I wouldn't have lost that rosary for a million. I just got it the other day from the holy father himself with his special blessing. It is indeed a treasure for a devout Catholic like myself. I cannot thank you enough."

He was about to say farewell when Barclay interrupted.

"I, too, am a devout Catholic," he announced, "and am more than pleased to be of service to one of my faith."

Everybody was introduced and the four returned to the tearoom. There more confidences were exchanged and the confidence game began. It appeared that Mr. O'Hara had come to Europe from his distant home town of Sydney at the express request of the pope, who had entrusted to him the task of distributing $300,000 to deserving charities throughout the world.

"Here is the money in good Bank of England notes," he said, producing a fat wallet, "and here is a clipping from a London newspaper telling about it."

Barclay showed intense interest in the recital and the Philadelphia business man and his wife also were keenly interested when the Australian went on to say that he liked his new friends and had a proposition to make. He would confide—confide, entrust, confidence were words that slipped off his glib tongue every other minute—yes, he would entrust to them the task of acting as his agents in distributing the money.

Crooks Unmasked.

"But," he proceeded, "I am an Australian and I don't know much about Europe and America and I believe we should begin by showing we have confidence in each other. Just to show you, I'll let you, Mr. Barclay, take this wallet and walk around the block with it, your American friend accompanying you while I await your return."

That was done and then Barclay handed over his roll to O'Hara and the American, who walked around the block, exchanging some more confidences, and came back. Now came the turn of the Philadelphian. He exhibited American Express company traveler's checks amounting to $5,000. But the man from Australia said he didn't know what they were. He wanted to see cash, French or English or American bills. The Philadelphian went to the express company and asked for currency. He told enough of the story to the cashier for that veteran official to be suspicious. As the American left the office with the $5,000 in French notes, he was followed by two plain clothes men.

The detectives grabbed O'Hara and Barclay as the former stretched out his hand to take the money. O'Hara was identified as a notorious crook named William Ray and Barclay as his constant pal. Both are in jail.

Public Warned Against Rabbit Fever Danger

Washington.—Warning to the public in general against tularemia, a serious and often fatal disease known as "rabbit fever" or "deer-fly fever," has been issued by Paul G. Redington, chief of the biological survey and approved by the public health service.

It is a plague-like disease transmissible to human beings and of 500 human cases reported in this country 20 have terminated in death.

In nature the disease affects jack rabbits, snowshoe rabbits and cottontail rabbits. Men are known to have become infected by handling rabbit carcasses.

There is no danger of contracting the disease, Mr. Redington stated, from eating rabbit meat if it is thoroughly cooked, even though the animal may have been infected.

Wife of Governor Once Lived in Railroad Car

Santa Fe, N. M.—Mrs. R. C. Dillon, wife of the governor of New Mexico knows something about pioneering. She lived in a railroad car-house when she first came to this state. Yet now she finds it difficult to keep the mansion on the governor's salary of $5,000 a year.

"When we were living in Illinois—I was just a baby then," she said, "my father, M. R. Williams, was advised to work in the open, so he got a job on a bridge construction crew when the Santa Fe railroad was building into Albuquerque in 1880. Mother and I joined him, living in a car-house.

"After Mr. Dillon and I were married we lived in the little town of Encino. There were few educational advantages for the children and I gave them kindergarten work at home and then instruction in music.

"Although I'm interested in club work, I've never been active in it. I have been kept too busy at home with our five children. Now that Mr. Dillon is governor I have more freedom. I like to see new places and new people and accompany my husband on most of his trips over the state."

Mail Plane Averages 168 Miles an Hour

Chicago.—The National Air Transport, operating air-mail planes between New York and Chicago, announced that Pilot L. H. Garrison had made a new speed record recently in the night flight on the Chicago-Cleveland leg.

He left Chicago at 8:10 p. m., and landed at Cleveland at 10:03, making the 318 miles in 1 hour and 53 minutes at an average speed of more than 168 miles an hour. The old record was more than two hours.

Long Island Has One Bright Spot, Anyhow

Locust Valley, N. Y.—A priceless splash of red and pink and white enlivens the dull winter landscape of Long Island. The rare collection of camellias on the estate of William R. Coe, millionaire racehorse owner and sportsman, is in bloom in his greenhouses here.

Twenty years have been given by Coe to the upbuilding of this collection of little-known oriental flowers, brought out of China and many other sections of the Far East. Today the collection cannot be duplicated because of the federal government's ban on plant importation.

The flowers are handsome blooms resembling the rose. The plant is a shrub with waxy dark green leaves. They derived their name not from Camille, as once supposed, but from Kamellus or Camelli, a Jesuit or Moravian monk, said to have been the first to bring the plants from the East. Camellias flourished in some southern gardens in America a century or more ago and a few are said to be still growing in the wild state in South Carolina.

The Coe collection escaped destruction but suffered serious damage a few years ago when fire destroyed the camellia house. All the plants then had to be cut back to the stems. At last they have regained their former glory—their six weeks' blooming season.

Ignorance About Snakes Costs Farmers Millions

Memphis, Tenn.—For the edification of those innocent snake fight fans who prove Barnum was right, Cary Jones, known in circus circles as the man who knows most about snakes, begs leave to say:

1. "Most of the stories about fierce snake fights are pure bunk.
2. "After years of watching snakes I can truthfully say they like to live in perfect harmony; this regardless of their species."

Ignorance about snakes costs the country about $220,000,000 a year, Jones estimates. Farmers who kill nonpoisonous kinds are losing their best friends.

"These snakes live on rodents and other pests that destroy crops. They should be protected by law," he said.

Pet Rats Frolic With Farmer in Homestead

Keene, N. H.—Pet rats share his home with George A. Hall, a farmer of Surry, and the rodents have become so friendly they will eat out of his hand and follow him about the house.

Hall has a regular feeding place for them in his kitchen. None of them seem to mind his presence, but when a stranger enters the pets scamper to hiding places.

LIVES FIVE YEARS WITH LONE WOLF

Indian Youth Found Existing in Primitive State.

Wichita Falls, Texas.—A Tarzan of real life is adjusting himself to civilization after living for five years in the mountains with only a wolf for a companion. He is Sin Roba, a nineteen-year-old Indian.

The youth lived on an Apache reservation in New Mexico until he was fourteen years old, when his father was banished from the tribe because of smallpox. The son elected to go with his father, as did an old squaw. They went to the mountains, which extend from New Mexico to southwestern Texas. The father, very ill, soon died, and the Indian woman died soon afterward. The boy buried them and faced primitive life alone.

He obtained food by picking wild berries, and by killing fish and animals with a spear made by fastening a sharp flint rock on a long pole. The boy caught a wolf cub, tamed it, and taught it to help him hunt.

Recently, after wandering to the Rio Grande, the young man was taken from his primitive world by officers who found him sitting naked on the river bank. He was brought to Wichita Falls, but he refused to eat cooked food or to sleep on a bed. He rebelled against clothing, but finally accepted it.

Sin Roba had learned Spanish while on the Apache reservation in New Mexico, and it was in this language that he revived his power of speech to tell the strange story of his experiences. He was then taken to a state hospital, where physicians pronounced him "an unusually bright fellow."

The youth is now trying to learn the ways of white men. He has refused to return to the Indians who drove out his father.

Youth Garbed in Undies Kisses Buxom Policeman

New York.—When Francis Flynn was arraigned before Magistrate Smith in West Side court, the charge entered against him was disorderly conduct, but it was really for larceny that he spent three days in jail, being unable to pay an alternative $10 fine.

He had stolen a kiss and the story of the theft was told rather vehemently by the kissee and complainant, Patrolman William Kearney of the West Sixty-eighth Street station. As he told it he glared at Flynn, who appeared in court wearing a policeman's uniform coat, a pair of ill-fitting blue trousers and a pair of shoes much too large for him.

"I was standing on the corner," said Patrolman Kearney, "when this—this—defendant dashed up to me, wearing only lightweight underwear, and hugged and kissed me."

"Kissed you?" asked the court.

"Yes, your honor," replied the blushing Kearney. "He actually kissed me."

"What do you mean by going around kissing policemen?" asked the court, turning to Flynn.

"All I remember," said Flynn, "is that I went to a party in that neighborhood last night and possibly I left my clothes there."

"I didn't mean to offend the officer," he explained.

"I'd rather you had taken a pass at me, or even kicked me," said Mr. Kearney. "No one—no man, I mean—drunk or sober, is going to kiss me on the public street and get away with it."

Hurt Lip Forbids Kiss; Court Gives Damages

Paris.—Lost kisses were appraised at 40,000 francs recently by French courts. Such damages were awarded Madame Marie Laparcerie, a writer of note, upon a showing that she was unable for months to kiss her children because her lip, injured in an automobile accident, pained her too much when she tried to bestow the maternal kiss.

Madame Laparcerie lost her suit in the lower courts when her claim was based on a scar on her breast that she felt would prevent her from wearing low-cut evening gowns. The "kiss" plea, on her appeal, moved the court and she won her case.

Bowlder Crashes Through Home, Children Sleep On

Pontardawe, Wales.—Three sound sleepers live in this little Glamorganshire village. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Jenkens.

When a 10-ton bowlder, speeding down a 150-foot hill, crashed into their home and bounded through bathroom and kitchen, the three children continued to dream.

They did not awake until their parents rushed in, expecting to find them dead. No one was hurt.

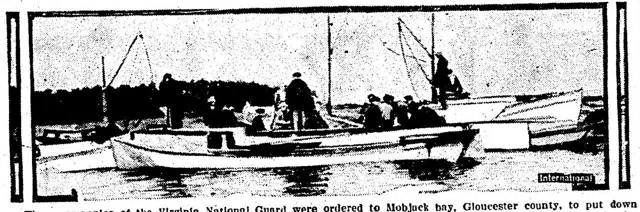
Tongers Involved in Virginia Oyster War



Three companies of the Virginia National Guard were ordered to Mobjack bay, Gloucester county, to put down disorders arising from the war between the oyster tongers and the state authorities caused by the leasing of valuable oyster planting grounds by the Old Dominion to influential oyster planting interests. AID IS GIVEN TO WORLD'S LONELIEST MAN IN DEATH

Aged Recluse, Survived by No Kinsfolk, Is Saved From Burial in Pauper's Grave.

Fullerton, Calif.—The final chapter of a life of utter loneliness was written here when funeral services were held for Bartholomew Dobermeier, seventy-four years of age, of La Habra, who died at the County hospital, survived by no kinsfolk and but few friends.

Through the generosity of La Habra women, who made up a purse to defray funeral expenses, Dobermeier was spared what would have been the final ironic touch, burial in a pauper's grave.

Although he had lived in La Habra for the past six years, Dobermeier had but one intimate friend, Harry Hauether, legless photographer.

To Hauether Dobermeier told the pathetic story of his lonely life. He was a native of Germany, and when but a little boy his father promised him that when he was old enough to make a man's pair of boots he would give him money with which to come to America.

At thirteen years of age the boy started on his journey to this country, with no friends to go to, no resources except his ability to make boots. On the boat he met a girl, fifteen years old, who took him to friends whom she was joining in Iowa.

There he spent many years, making his living as a shoemaker. He never married. Hauether does not know what became of the girl. Dobermeier never heard from his parents or his sister.

Coming to La Habra, Dobermeier occupied a grub wagon parked on the railroad right of way in front of a packing house. He made few friends, always seeming afraid that he might impose upon those who attempted to be kind to him.

The old man was a conspicuous figure when he appeared upon the streets of La Habra with his long white beard, walking slightly stooped, with his hands behind his back.

Iron Hats for Police to Avoid Ice Peril

Philadelphia.—Steel helmets similar to those worn by members of the American expeditionary forces are to be part of the equipment of the Delaware river bridge police when snows and ice cover the suspension cables of the big span.

Painted white, the helmets are designed to protect their wearers from falling ice and snow. Last winter one patrolman narrowly escaped serious injury when a large piece of ice fell from a suspension cable and penetrated his hat.

Several motorists have reported to bridge authorities that the roofs of their cars have been pierced by snow and ice falling from the tops of the cables, 200 feet in the air.

HER MAD EFFORTS TO BE POPULAR

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

WHEN Elsie Sherman married Wade Talbot, who was several years her senior and possessed of a good income, everybody in Woodstown felt that it was an ideal match in every way.

Elsie was young, pretty and inordinately fond of the luxuries of life. Possibly her fondness for these things was the greater because her mother was a widow and possessed only a moderate income, and even though Mrs. Sherman denied herself in every way she found it impossible to do more than give her daughter a fair education, a comfortable though plain home, and very ordinary clothing. To frivolous Elsie, who was fond of finery, this was a sore trial, and in fact at times she failed to appreciate the effort her mother was making in her behalf, and would make Mrs. Sherman unhappy in showing envy for girls whom she considered more fortunate than herself.

Poor Mrs. Sherman was at her wits end when Elsie and Wade Talbot met. After an ardent courtship of only a few weeks Wade and Elsie were married and went to live in the old Talbot house on Vine street.

A whirl of gayety followed, for the young couple were both popular, and Elsie soon became the leader of the smart young married set. There were morning calls, dinners and luncheons, dances and bridge. Nearly all the evenings were spent at bridge or dancing, with Elsie always in the lead.

Soon the house on Vine street seemed old-fashioned to the Talbots and a lot was bought on Terrace avenue and a more pretentious house built. This called forth a new series of entertainments and Mrs. Sherman was invited to come and live with her daughter in order to lend her aid to Elsie's social campaign.

Wade bought a car and Elsie learned to drive. It was a pleasant sight to watch Elsie whirl by with a gay party of friends or to see her drive downtown to meet her husband at the close of business hours. Whatever she did, Elsie was always the gayest of the gay, and there seemed to be no end to her capacity for good times.

"Youth is wonderful," said old Mrs. Wynne one day when she was calling on Mrs. Sherman. "There seems to be no end to Elsie's vitality. Why, if we did in a month what she does in a week we would be wrecks."

"Youth is like one's bank account," answered Mrs. Sherman, gravely. "It is good to have, but must not be overdrawn." She sighed, for well she knew that many times Elsie came home tired to death, but when urged to rest would answer carelessly:

"Mumsie, dear, some day Wade and I will settle down to be just such a comfy old couple as you and dad were. Then I will rest and rest. Don't worry, I will come out all right, for I am strong as the strongest. Why, I wouldn't show the white feather to Ruth Sheridan for worlds. You know, she is just doing everything she can to wrest my leadership from me. I guess I will get a tonic, though."

But when her growing fatigue finally sent her, in a fright, to old Doctor Bray he told her frankly that if she did not rest a nervous breakdown was inevitable.

"I can give you tonics," said Doctor Bray, "but what you need is proper food and rest."

"Why, doctor, you talk just like mother," laughed Elsie. "Who ever heard of good times ever hurting anybody? I am just as strong as the rest of the girls. I have never been sick in my life. Please give me a good strong tonic."

The doctor shook his head when he handed Elsie the bottle of tonic, but she looked up into his face with a laugh and ran gayly out to her waiting car.

As time went on Elsie went faster and faster. Wade sometimes remonstrated with her. It was becoming impossible for him to attend to his business properly, for the late hours he kept in his attendance upon Elsie reduced his efficiency, and in consequence his business suffered. Finally in order to devote more time to his affairs and procure more money to spend, he was compelled to almost entirely give up accompanying her when they were invited out evenings. In her growing nervous state Elsie attributed his lack of attention to the fact that he had ceased to care for her. She grew cross and began to avoid him and soon a coolness sprang up between them.

Poor Mrs. Sherman was in despair. It looked as if their happiness was in a fair way to be wrecked by Elsie's thoughtlessness, but whenever she tried to remonstrate with her daughter she only succeeded in bringing down a perfect storm of tears, which always ended in Elsie declaring that Wade no longer loved her, and that Mrs. Sherman was only trying to be cross.

One morning after an especially gay week Elsie did not come down to breakfast. Mrs. Sherman waited for some time, then taking a tray on which she had placed some crisp toast, a pot of delicious coffee and a wonderful pink rose, she ascended the stairs and tapped softly at Elsie's bedroom door. Getting no response after waiting a moment, she opened the door and entered the room.

[illegible] she said "I don't want any br[illegible] I don't want anything but just to lie here and never, never move again. For two nights I haven't closed my eyes, and when I think of getting up and going to Ruth Sheridan's luncheon—" But she got no further for the rest was smothered in sobs. Mrs. Sheridan drew her daughter's hot head to her motherly breast and began to softly stroke the girl's fair hair. What she had so much feared—it was very evident that Elsie had gone her limit.

When old Doctor Bray came her worst fears were confirmed. Elsie was facing a complete mental and physical breakdown. This side of the case was quite heartbreaking, especially when one realized that the girl had risked her life as well as her husband's love in her mad efforts to be popular. And, worst of all, she had set a pace for the others in her set which was likely to wreck their happiness as well as her own.

Doctor Bray left some medicine and much good advice. He ordered weeks of absolute quiet, good nursing and freedom from all worries. He hoped that Elsie's youth might save her, but he looked grave.

"But, mother, dear," sobbed Elsie, "how can I help worrying? I have lost Wade's love and all but ruined his business career. What have I left to live for?"

But the weeks which followed proved that Elsie had not lost her husband's love. It is true that he had been grieved and distressed by Elsie's extravagance, but he owned that he, too, was to blame because he had first encouraged her, then blamed her for her foolishness. But, after all, Elsie was his Elsie and had the makings of a wonderful woman. The many long talks and the hours spent together in the sickroom developed a lasting love and comradeship between husband and wife which after-years only served to strengthen.

As for the rest of Elsie's "set," her breakdown came as a blessing, for Elsie and Wade were not the only ones whose happiness was in danger of being hopelessly wrecked.

Elsie still leads the social set in Woodstown, but she is a different Elsie. Happiness, home and health comes first with her. She is still fun-loving and gay, but she tempers her good times with the sense that comes from understanding.

"Elsie is making a wonderful woman," said old Mrs. Wynne one afternoon when she was calling on Mrs. Sherman. "And, best of all, she seems to have such a way with the rest of her set. Why, Woodstown is getting quite a reputation for being a center of happiness. Anyway, we don't hear of many domestic troubles here. Our young people seem to be wonderfully contented."

Before Mankind Knew of Food Preservatives

It is easy to realize that much of the food eaten in prehistoric times, as well as in classical times, as we can prove, was putrescent, and to be able to eat it properly man acquired a tolerance for rotting provisions.

There were no facilities such as we have today for the preservation of perishable food. Grain and seeds, it is true, could be kept. Fruits and roots could be dried. Fish and meats could be cured or salted—but there seems to be little evidence that this was done to any considerable extent.

In the days before the Christian era, in Rome and in Greece laws were passed in order to prevent the sale of rotten food, yet it seems a fair supposition that the strong seasoning and the highly flavored sauces and condiments used in that age were not so much intended to satisfy a taste for strong flavorings as they were to disguise an evil taste of the decaying food, sold in a rotten state in spite of the law.—Guy Lowell, in Scribner's Magazine.

Piece-of-Eight

Rumors of pirate gold buried on some West Indian cay have even caused a lot of sand-digging in the last few years, and there is hardly an island from the Bahamas down to Trinidad that is not the legendary repository of chests of Spanish doubloons and pieces-of-eight.

By the way, I wonder how many readers know just what a piece-of-eight is? I confess I did not until I was shown one on a transatlantic ship last summer. The owner, an American, was carrying it as a pocket piece, having bought it from an American consul in a South American tour. The dictionary defines a piece-of-eight as a "Spanish dollar," but this was apparently an eighth of a large slab of silver which had evidently been covered with armorial bearings and letterings, and was of about the weight of an American dollar.—Albert Stevens Crockett, in the Nomad.

He Was Broad-Minded

The recently published biography of Henry Ward Beecher has reawakened interest in anything relating to that once most popular American preacher. During a vacation outing he heard one of his published sermons delivered in an obscure village. At the close of the service he said to the "divine":

"That was a very good discourse. How long did it take you to write it?"

"Oh, I tossed it off in an evening," was the answer.

"Indeed!" responded Mr. Beecher. "It took me longer than that to think out the framework of that very sermon."

"Are you Henry Ward Beecher?"

"I am," was the reply.

"Well, then," said the unabashed purloiner, "all I have to say is that I ain't ashamed to preach one of your sermons anywhere."—Boston Globe

Dry Feet—Dry Shoes

Dry Feet mean comfort. Dry Shoes mean money saved, for soaking ruins leather—as you probably know by costly experience.

Protect your feet and save your shoes with long-wearing "Ball-Band" Rubbers.

"BALL (Red Ball TRADE MARK) BAND"

You can know "Ball-Band" Footwear by the Red Ball Trade Mark on the sole. Our customers who wear "Ball-Band" tell us that this Red Ball means Longest Wear, at Lowest Cost per Day's Wear. Sizes and styles for men, women and children.

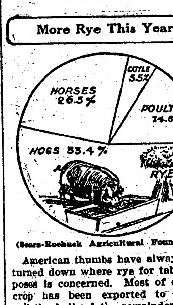
More Rye This Year



(Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation)

American thumbs have always been turned down where rye for table purposes is concerned. Most of our rye crop has been exported to Europe and the bulk of the remainder fed to farm animals, according to a survey by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. This year, however, a crop of 42,000,000 bushels is expected and less than usual will be sent to Europe as their crops will also be fairly large. This fact, coupled with feed-crop failures in many of our rye-growing sections, means that more of our rye crop will be fed to farm animals this year than usual. Hogs, on an average, consume 53.4% of the rye used on the farm, horses 26.5%, poultry 14.6% and cattle 55%.

LESSON XII.

FEED THE CALVES: With proper feed and care, fall and early winter dairy calves will gain a pound a day from the time they are born, and be ready for pasture in the Spring. Prof. Haecker's system of raising dairy calves is to leave the calf with its mother until it has its first feed. Give it its mother's milk the first week. Begin feeding skim milk the second week and gradually increase the skim milk and decrease the whole milk until all skim milk is fed at three weeks.

Begin feeding grain at one week. The grain fed the cows will do. A handful in the bottom of the pail as the calf finishes the milk will give the calf an early start on grain. Hay and silage should be fed as soon as will be eaten. Calves should have water at noon.

Milk should be fed fresh and warm and in a clean pail. Two to three quarts to a feed is ample. Overfeeding causes trouble. Skim milk is a splendid feed and can be fed to advantage until the calves are six or 8 mos. or older. Calves should have stanchions so they may be fed separately, and have a dry, clean pen.

DAIRY FEEDING TO BE TAUGHT FARMERS' WEEK

Dairy Feeding schools, sessions of which will be held at 9:15 A. M. Tuesday Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, will be a new feature of the Farmers' and Homemakers' Week Short Course at University Farm January 16 to 21. The school has been added to give dairy farmers opportunity to study phases of their business in an orgaanized way. H. R. Searles and R. L. Donovan, dairy extension specialists, will be in charge.

The economics of dairying will be considered at the first meeting. Reasons for high production, what determines dairy wages and profits, and how the dairy cow uses her feed will be explained. At the second meeting the specialists will show how to balance the ration of the dairy cow, the actual feeding value of the various feeds, methods of combining them to get the best results, and the effect of price on selection of feed.

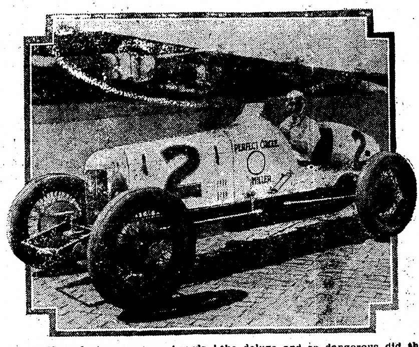
Factors of dairy management other than rations will be the subject before the third meeting. Mineral, salt and water requirements will be discussed. Disease and other problems will also be featured. Fitting the farm to the dairy business will be the subject before the fourth and last session. Such matters as the number of cows to keep to fit the farm area, crop production, equipment, etc., feed crops needed, and the importance of per acre income as well as per cow income will fall within the scope of this discussion.

The dairy school will be only a single feature of the program arranged for the annual Farmers' Week at the University station. A dozen classes in other lines of farming and also in homemaking will be held simultaneously. Every program and all the class work will be free to the students from the farms.

More than 300 farmers have signed up for the correspondence course in keeping farm accounts, conducted by W. L. Cavert, farm management specialist of the University of Minnesota. It is not too late to join the class. Send your application to Mr. Cavert at University Farm.

FRANK LOCKHART, AMERICAN AUTO ACE, FINDS ALL SPEEDWAYS ALIKE TO HIM

Youthful Driver Feels at Home on Dirt, Concrete and Brick Tracks as He Establishes New Marks—Travels 171.02 Miles an Hour.



MUD or dust, concrete or boards, rain or shine—these make no difference to young Frank Lockhart, of Los Angeles, who today at 24 is the fastest automobile driver in the United States, if not in the world.

Few motorists, even of the hardened professional racers, have had the varied experience of Lockhart, who has driven on almost every kind of track.

His best record—and he is after more—was set on a dry lake bed at Muroc, near Los Angeles, California, last April when he whirled over the alkali sands at 171.02 miles an hour—a figure comparable to that of Major H. O. D. Segrave, the Briton, who drove his "Mystery Sunbeam" at 203.79 miles an hour at Daytona Beach, Florida. Major Segrave holds the British record, of course, and Lockhart the American.

Previous to Lockhart's feat, the best American record was established by the intrepid Tommy Milton, who a few years before he retired whizzed along at 156.4 miles an hour at Daytona Beach.

What makes Lockhart's figures more remarkable than even Major Segrave's is the fact that the American used a car with a displacement of only 91.5 cubic inches, as compared with the displacement in the Englishman's machine of 1200 cubic inches.

Rain likewise holds no terrors for Lockhart for racing fans recall that he won the Decoration Day race on the Indianapolis Speedway last year in a driving rainstorm. So sudden was the deluge and so dangerous did the track become that the Speedway officials immediately cut the usual 500 miles down to 400 miles.

Lockhart, driving without relief shot his tiny car around the brick track 160 times at an average speed of 94.63 miles an hour and finished five miles ahead of his nearest rival, Harry Hartz, also of Los Angeles.

Then he followed up that victory by running first on last September 18th, at the Altoona Speedway, with a speed of 117 miles an hour. He interspersed those two notable winnings by capturing the Charlotte, N. C., race on August 23, with an average speed of 120.54 miles per hour, faster than either of the other two races.

For some time Lockhart was in "disgrace" with the American Automobile Association for taking part in dirt track competition, most of which he won handily. He had considerable experience on dirt tracks and in 1924 he ran first in the Thanksgiving Day race at Ascot Park, Los Angeles.

His most notable recent victory this year was in May when he drove his machine 147.729 miles an hour at the Atlantic City Motor Speedway. It established a new record for board tracks.

In the following month, just to show his versatility, Lockhart won a dirt track at the Michigan State Fair Grounds, on June 5. The track had been treated with calcium chloride and it was dustless, firm and, as Lockhart explained later, ideal in every respect for automobile racing.

Hockey, 1-00000

The Holt Hockey Team, with several auto loads of boosters, motored to Strathcona on Sunday for a return game with the team there. Both sides played an airtight game all the way there and as no-one scored, it was decided to play an extra period.

No scores were made in the first five minute period, so it was agreed upon that the teams should try one more.

Some of our local players who had stuck it out during the entire game quit at this juncture, so our team played short against the Strathcona aggregation, who kept putting in new men about every 2 minutes thruout the entire game.

After playing about two minutes of the last period, the Strathcona gang was able to put in one score, and their timekeeper called the game and cheated Holt out of 3 minutes of play.

Jake Greenagle was the lucky man to score the victory for his team. Our team was handicapped, as they are used to fairly good ice, and when they got to Strathcona they had to dodge a lot of willow stumps.

Msieu Jacques LaFollette Sacre Mojave Desert Bendix Isaacson Westby of MiddleRiver played one period with each of the teams, thus distributing evenly whatever harm he might have done.

The two teams may clash again Sunday on the local ice, in which case a dandy scrap may be anticipated.

Melvin Nohre and Jim Tobin spent Saturday at Thief River Falls doing some trading.

Be sure and read the feeding record of the John O. Johnson herd which we are publishing elsewhere in this issue.

THE HOLT SCHOOL RECORD

Published by the Seventh and Eighth Grades

It is estimated that on the average dollar bill there are no less than 16,477,889 germs of different kinds. Think of the misery these little bits of life may cause!

If you have any extra dollar bills which are not absolutely new and clean it would be a wise thing to send a few of them to the local news office. This plan will get rid of the germs and at the same time insure your getting the news of the community and the school.

There is one subject in school that does not receive much space in this record, and that is reading. What can make a child more interested in school or hold his interest than a good story? "Once upon a time"—what magic there is in those words! Children will become friends with anyone who can thrill them with a tale. Little wonder that the story is popular. It has a human appeal; it holds him intent on adventure, mystery, or character; and when a child has finished a good short-story he has learned something that he never knew before.

Mark Twain, one of of our best story writers, has given us a few lessons worth while. We are listing three of them:

"To be good is noble; but to show others how to be good is nobler and no trouble."

"Be careless in your dress if you must, but keep a tidy soul."

"True irreverence is disrespect for another man's god."

The third and fourth grades have been reading stories. From these stories the pupils are drawing and cutting out pictures illustrating the characters in the book.

Lorna Peterson has just completed the graph which rewards the rate of individual direction cards. The first grade pupils have been very excited and have been trying very hard to be the first to finish. Lucille Horien will be a close second, and Omar Hanson comes next.

These cards explain the reading lessons giving the children simple instructions to be read and carried out. Each card is more difficult than the one before it. The first card contains two new words, and there are fifty cards.

The fifth and sixth grades are now studying the important explorers of the world. Here is another example of reading. It certainly will be interesting to live in imagination the adventures of these men.

The fifth and sixth grade drawing classes have been drawing lanterns. They have been decorated in many different colors.

The Public Land system adopted after the Revolutionary War is the topic for discussion in the seventh grade history class. Charts have been made to illustrate the system.

The eighth grade citizenship class is getting interested in politics. The members of the classes are studying the UnitedStates government and at present are working on the Presidential Cabinet. A chart has been made illustrating the organization of our government and how laws are made.

Dancing and Beefsteak

It has been estimated that if the energy which a person puts into a Charleston dance were employed in some gainful occupation, the compensation would suffice to support an average family on beefsteak and onions for from three to four days.

Tuesday Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, will be a new feature of the Farmers' and Homemakers' Week Short Course at University Farm January 16 to 21. The school has been added to give dairy farmers opportunity to study phases of their business in an organized way. H. R. Searles and R. L. Donovan, dairy extension specialists, will be in charge.

The economics of dairying will be considered at the first meeting. Reasons for high production, what determines dairy wages and profits, and how the dairy cow uses her feed will be explained. At the second meeting the specialists will show how to balance the ration of the dairy cow, the actual feeding value of the various feeds, methods of combining them to get the best results, and the effect of price on selection of feed.

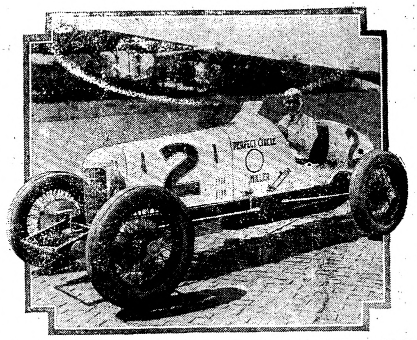
Factors of dairy management other than rations will be the subject before the third meeting. Mineral, salt and water requirements will be discussed. Disease and other problems will also be featured. Fitting the farm to the dairy business will be the subject before the fourth and last session. Such matters as the number of cows to keep to fit the farm area, crop production, equipment, etc., feed crops needed, and the importance of per acre income as well as per cow income will fall within the scope of this discussion.

The dairy school will be only a single feature of the program arranged for the annual Farmers' Week at the University station. A dozen classes in other lines of farming and also in homemaking will be held simultaneously. Every program and all the class work will be free to the students from the farms.

More than 300 farmers have signed up for the correspondence course in keeping farm accounts, conducted by W. L. Cavert, farm management specialist of the University of Minnesota. It is not too late to join the class. Send your application to Mr. Cavert at University Farm.

FRANK LOCKHART, AMERICAN AUTO ACE, FINDS ALL SPEEDWAYS ALIKE TO HIM

Youthful Driver Feels at Home on Dirt, Concrete and Brick Tracks as He Establishes New Marks—Travels 171.02 Miles an Hour.



MUD or dust, concrete or boards, rain or shine—these make no difference to young Frank Lockhart, of Los Angeles, who today at 24 is the fastest automobile driver in the United States, if not in the world.

Few motorists, even of the hardened professional racers, have had the varied experience of Lockhart, who has driven on almost every kind of track.

His best record—and he is after more—was set on a dry lake bed at Muroc, near Los Angeles, California, last April when he whirled over the alkali sands at 171.02 miles an hour—a figure comparable to that of Major H. O. D. Segrave, the Briton, who drove his "Mystery Sunbeam" at 203.79 miles an hour at Daytona Beach, Florida. Major Segrave holds the British record, of course, and Lockhart the American.

Previous to Lockhart's feat, the best American record was established by the intrepid Tommy Milton, who a few years before he retired whizzed along at 156.4 miles an hour at Daytona Beach.

What makes Lockhart's figures more remarkable than even Major Segrave's is the fact that the American used a car with a displacement of only 91.5 cubic inches, as compared with the displacement in the Englishman's machine of 1200 cubic inches.

Rain likewise holds no terrors for Lockhart for racing fans recall that he won the Decoration Day race on the Indianapolis Speedway last year in a driving rainstorm. So sudden was the deluge and so dangerous did the track become that the Speedway officials immediately cut the usual 500 miles down to 400 miles.

Lockhart, driving without relief shot his tiny car around the brick track 160 times at an average speed of 94.63 miles an hour and finished five miles ahead of his nearest rival, Harry Hartz, also of Los Angeles.

Then he followed up that victory by running first on last September 18th, at the Altoona Speedway, with a speed of 117 miles an hour. He interspersed those two notable winnings by capturing the Charlotte, N. C., race on August 23, with an average speed of 120.54 miles per hour, faster than either of the other two races.

For some time Lockhart was in "disgrace" with the American Automobile Association for taking part in dirt track competition, most of which he won handily. He had considerable experience on dirt tracks and in 1924 he ran first in the Thanksgiving Day race at Ascot Park, Los Angeles.

His most notable recent victory this year was in May when he drove his machine 147.729 miles an hour at the Atlantic City Motor Speedway. It established a new record for board tracks.

In the following month, just to show his versatility, Lockhart won a dirt track at the Michigan State Fair Grounds, on June 5. The track had been treated with calcium chloride and it was dustless, firm and, as Lockhart explained later, ideal in every respect for automobile racing.

Hockey, 1-00000

The Holt Hockey Team, with several auto loads of boosters, motored to Strathcona on Sunday for a return game with the team there. Both sides played an airtight game all the way there and as no-one scored, it was decided to play an extra period.

No scores were made in the first five minute period, so it was agreed upon that the teams should try one more.

Some of our local players who had stuck it out during the entire game quit at this juncture, so our team played short against the Strathcona aggregation, who kept putting in new men about every 2 minutes throut the entire game.

After playing about two minutes of the last period, the Strathcona gang was able to put in one score, and their timekeeper called the game and cheated Holt out of 3 minutes of play.

Jake Greenagle was the lucky man to score the victory for his team. Our team was handicapped, as they are used to fairly good ice; and when they got to Strathcona they had to dodge a lot of willow stumps.

Maieu Jacques LaFollette Sacre Mojave Desert Bendix Isaacson Westby of MiddleRiver played one period with each of the teams, thus distributing evenly whatever harm he might have done.

The two teams may clash again Sunday on the local ice, in which case a dandy scrap may be anticipated.

THE HOLT SCHOOL RECORD

Published by the Seventh and Eighth Grades

It is estimated that on the average dollar bill there are no less than 16,477,389 germs of different kinds. Think of the misery these little bits of life may cause!

If you have any extra dollar bills which are not absolutely new and clean it would be a wise thing to send a few of them to the local news office. This plan will get rid of the germs and at the same time insure your getting the news of the community and the school.

There is one subject in school that does not receive much space in this record, and that is reading. What can make a child more interested in school or hold his interest than a good story? "Once upon a time"—what magic there is in those words! Children will become friends with anyone who can thrill them with a tale. Little wonder that the story is popular. It has a human appeal; it holds him intent on adventure, mystery, or character; and when a child has finished a good short-story he has learned something that he never knew before.

Mark Twain, one of of our best story writers, has given us a few lessons worth while. We are listing three of them:

"To be good is noble; but to show others how to be good is nobler and no trouble."

"Be careless in your dress if you must, but keep a tidy soul."

"True irreverence is disrespect for another man's god."

The third and fourth grades have been reading stories. From these stories the pupils are drawing and cutting out pictures illustrating the characters in the book.

Lorna Peterson has just completed the graph which rewards the rate of individual direction cards. The first grade pupils have been very excited and have been trying very hard to be the first to finish. Lucille Horien will be a close second, and Omar Hanson comes next.

These cards explain the reading lessons giving the children simple instructions to be read and carried out. Each card is more difficult than the one before it. The first card contains two new words, and there are fifty cards.

The fifth and sixth grades are now studying the important explorers of the world. Here is another example of reading. It certainly will be interesting to live in imagination the adventures of these men.

The fifth and sixth grade drawing classes have been drawing lanterns. They have been decorated in many different colors.

The Public Land system adopted after the Revolutionary War is the topic for discussion in the seventh grade history class. Charts have been made to illustrate the system.

The eighth grade citizenship class is getting interested in politics. The members of the classes are studying the UnitedStates government and at present are working on the Presidential Cabinet. A chart has been made illustrating the organization of our government and how laws are made.

Film Speeds 3 Miles Minute

Camera Slows Down Machinery to One Two-Hundredth of Speed.

Detroit. — Feeding movie film through a camera at the rate of three miles a minute to slow down rapidly moving machinery to about one two-hundredth of its normal speed is the feat accomplished by C. Francis Jenkins of Washington. At the meeting of the Society of Automotive Engineers here Mr. Jenkins told of the "chronoteine camera," one of his latest inventions, and how it may be applied to the study of automobile engines.

Instead of the 16 pictures a second, taken by the ordinary movie camera, or the 128 taken by the "ultra-rapid" camera, now frequently used in filming athletic events, the chronoteine takes 3,200 pictures a second at its normal rate. If desired, it can be speeded up even further, and take as many as 10,000 a second. When these are projected in the ordinary machine at the speed of 16 a second, the apparent speed of the motion is correspondingly reduced. When taken at 3,200 per second, the reduction of speed is 200 times, and at the higher speeds it is of course greater.

Uses New System.

In the usual type of motion-picture camera, the film is stopped for each exposure, so that it stops and starts 16 times a second. At such high speeds as those employed in the chronoteine camera this is impossible, for the film would be torn to pieces.

A further difficulty is introduced, because with a single lens extremely short exposures would have to be made. Otherwise the picture would be blurred, just as if the object itself were close to the camera and moving at such a high speed. Mr. Jenkins has avoided this difficulty by providing 48 lenses, set in the periphery of a 13-inch disk, which turns at a speed of 4,000 revolutions per minute. The film moves back of this disk, so that the image formed by the lenses moves right along with the film. In fact, the exposures overlap, as the exposure is begun through one lens before that through the preceding lens is completed. At 3,200 exposures a second, each one is about one twenty-five hundredth of a second in length. With the rapid lenses used, and sensitive film, this is easily sufficient for a fully timed negative in bright sunlight. In the ordinary movie camera, at 16 a second, each exposure is about one thirty-second of a second in duration.

Mr. Jenkins calls attention to the good photographic quality in the pictures, which is unusual in such high-speed studies. "The pictures are true photographic pictures having half-tone values like other motion pictures, not mere shadowy outlines of grayish silhouettes," he says. "They are made out of doors as well as in the laboratory, of large subjects or small subjects, and from a moving vehicle as readily as from a fixed platform.

Has Photographic Quality.

"The chronoteine camera is an instrument for the study of many problems in science and engineering, some of which are not possible of accurate determination in any other way. Some additional applications of this instrument which immediately suggest themselves are a study of gun recoil, shell trajectories and plate impacts, airplane propellers and landing-gear action, bursting of balloons and air hose, tire action over obstructions, water streams, propagation of flame, engine-valve rebound at high speed, cam-roller jumping, crankshaft whip; transformer explosions and circuit-breaker arcs; shuttle thread knots and bobbin action, brakeshoe and draft gear application; in fact, anything that moves too fast for the eye to follow can be shown slowed down and can be examined in detail at leisure and repeatedly."

Stone Age Principle Survives in New Saw

Washington.—A modern refinement of a Stone Age method of fashioning rock has come into use in the United States this year as the result of an experiment conducted under the supervision of the bureau of mines.

The device, known as a wire saw, proved its utility in Pennsylvania slate quarries by cutting large masses of the rock without the necessity of drilling, blasting and cutting, which by old methods have resulted in considerable waste.

Dr. Oliver Bowles, one of the bureau's experts, arranged for the experiments in co-operation with quarrymen after government engineers had studied operation of the wire saw in Belgium. The saw is merely a long steel cable, drawn at high speed across a rock surface and fed continuously with wet sand. The sand acts as an abrasive and enables the cable to sink into the rock at a rate of about two inches an hour. Operation cost, the bureau asserts, is half that of methods now generally in use, the speed of cutting is much greater, and the waste of material is much less.

Notwithstanding the thoroughly modern aspects of the machine, the bureau engineers find its efficiency depending upon the same phenomenon which prehistoric man utilized to make his arrow heads and tools of stone—the effect of abrasion or grinding.

Sea Lion Is Trainer for Endurance Swim

Berlin.—With a sea lion as a training partner and pacemaker, Otto Kemmerich, of Husum, Germany, professional swimming champion, hopes to establish a new world endurance record of 48 hours about Easter.

Kemmerich, who ranks next to Ernest Virkoetter in Germany's list of long-distance swimmers, recently purchased a two-year-old sea lion from a Hamburg circus. The beast quickly became attached to his new master and learned to accompany him on practice swims. He now acts as a pacemaker, keeping a short distance ahead of his master.

Whether the sea lion will remain at his master's side throughout his world championship attempts is a question interesting not only swimming fans, but zoologists.

Kemmerich expects to make another attempt to swim the English channel with the sea lion as a possible strong-arm bodyguard. His previous attempt to swim the channel in 1926 failed when a large fish attacked him.

VAST REGION IN TEXAS STILL LACKS RAILWAYS

Area of About 50,000 Square Miles as Yet Unpenetrated by the Iron Horse.

Kerrville, Texas.—Although once-wild regions of America now are bound under a network of railroads, a vast domain of 50,000 square miles in Texas is still as free from iron rails as when it was first traversed by early Spanish explorers. And this in spite of the fact that Texas led the nation in railroad building in 1927.

Into the railroadless region of Texas could be crammed the states of Maryland, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, Delaware and Rhode Island. The territory, spreading west from Kerrville to Alpine, embraces a fifth of the area of Texas.

Yet the sparsely settled region is not unproductive, it is known as the leading wool and mohair-producing territory of the world. Its mineral resources have been pronounced rich by government authorities, who name potash as one of the chief deposits.

Discovery of oil in the Pecos and San Angelo regions has resulted in the laying of pipelines across this hill country to inland shipping points and to ports on the Gulf of Mexico.

Railroads penetrate no farther than to San Angelo, Alpine, Del Rio, Kerrville, Llano and Menard. In the thinly settled interior, inhabitants without benefit of railway travel rely upon motor car and radio to relieve the monotony of their isolation.

Simply Denotes Size

The term horse chestnut is used, since horse in connection with fruits, etc., means large. The horse chestnut is a larger nut than the chestnut.

All Lima Digging for Lost Gold of Incas

Lima, Peru—The government has received a large number of applications from residents of Lima asking permission to excavate under various old buildings in the city where, legend has it, ancient Inca and Spanish colonial treasure is buried.

One spot in particular, situated on the "Calle Huerfanos" (Street of the Orphans) where the Marquis Negreiros is said to have died, a bachelor, three centuries ago after burying beneath his home huge quantities of heavy gold plate, Spanish doubloons, and other coin of the realm, is being sought after as a site for "diggings."

After getting permits the recipients set feverishly to work at the excavating. As far as is known, however, no success has attended the efforts yet.

Talking Barber Bores Customer to Violence

Chicago.—Sam Pardo, 2068 Kendall street, walked into the barber shop of Jim Arvio at 1257 South State street, sat in Arvio's chair and asked curtly for a haircut and shave. Arvio started to work.

"Well, it's fine weather we're having for this time of year, isn't it?" said Arvio as he snipped away.

Pardo made no answer. But Arvio ignored that.

"You know," the barber went on, "there was a feller come in here the other day and—" The story went on and on through the entire haircut and shave.

Then as the barber lifted him back into a sitting position Pardo leaped from the chair, seized an iron bar that lay on the floor and struck the barber over the head, knocking him unconscious.

"I did it because he talked too much," Prado said to the police.

DEATH ENDS TROTH OF FORTY YEARS

Suitor Leaves Large Fortune to His Fiancee.

Philadelphia.—In recognition of an engagement that remained unbroken for nearly forty years, Miss Bernice McNulty has been left the bulk of the $250,000 estate of William G. Gibson, wealthy Pittsburgh bachelor and coal operator.

"There is nothing unusual about it," said Adeline McNulty, sister of the legatee, with whom she lives together with another sister, Genevieve. "My sister and Mr. Gibson had been fast friends for 40 years. An early engagement was never broken, the two agreeing never to marry, yet a beautiful friendship remained."

The three sisters share a modest brick dwelling, owned for more than 80 years by the legatee, as a home in this city. It has a store front occupied by a chain grocery store. Miss Bernice McNulty is a woman in middle age with a fair complexion and dark brown hair.

"She is too broken by Mr. Gibson's death to talk about it," said her sister, "but I am sure the inheritance will not change in the least her mode of living. My sister always has been a woman of moderate tastes, attached to simple things and no doubt her habits of a lifetime cannot be changed, nor will she have any desire to change them.

"Mr. Gibson was a friend of the family for years. My sister met him 40 years ago while visiting relatives in Pittsburgh and afterward he became a friend of the entire family. The inheritance did not come as a surprise to her. She has known for some time she was going to receive the money."

Long Absent Cat Back Home by Parcel Post

North Andover, Mass.—Teddy, an ancient tomcat, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Murphy of Osgood street, North Andover, has returned home after an absence of six months. He came in style—via parcel post, special delivery—from Biddeford Pool, Maine, where he disappeared from the Murphy summer home early in July.

Where he's been all this time nobody knows except Teddy, and he can't tell. When questioned by his mistress after the postman delivered him, he just blinked his eyes and licked his chops. He is sleek, fat and healthy looking as ever.

He had been the family pet eight years, and when he failed to turn up one night everybody in the house wept many tears, annoyed the police for a week or two and finally gave him up as lost. He was not forgotten, however, and when news of his being found reached the Murphy home here there was great rejoicing.

A letter came from the postmistress at Biddeford Pool saying Teddy had turned up and was at the post office. "What'll we do?" she asked, and Mrs. Murphy replied to ship him along by mail, special delivery.

Chairman Had Merely Got Republics Mixed

"How should I know whose republic it was?" retorted a committee chairman, following her report at the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs Sixth district conference.

The feature of her report was in telling how good the disabled veterans are who live in the hospital hereabouts.

"They are great readers of literature," she said. "The only thing one boy asked for Christmas was 'Pluto's Republic.'"

There wasn't a ripple of amusement; the 450 women sitting before her did not seem to quite know why an official sitting on the platform nudged the speaker as she sat down. The chairman of the meeting allowed the correction:

"Did you mean 'Plato's Republic'?"—Boston Globe.

Meely decided that for at least a few weeks she could breathe freely, and feel comparatively secure from the danger of a visit.

And that very morning, just after recess time, as the children were trooping in from the playground, he walked in on her.

"Oh, dear, you here again!" she openly lamented as he, without offering her his hand, bowed rather curtly and drew forth a platform chair—not, however, seating himself while she stood, a courtesy to which she had, for so many months, been a stranger, that it thrilled her, to her amusement, almost as much as St. Croix' "manners" had thrilled Nettie the night before.

"I'm here," he grimly stated, standing behind his chair and folding his arms with a resolute, Napoleonic air that made her heart sink, "to hear you teach geography!"

"Here I stand—so help me Gawd!" she mocked at his determined mien. "Martin Luther!"

"And I don't leave this schoolroom until I have heard you!"

"Oh, gee!" she sighed.

He set his lips and stared straight ahead of him.

"I've had this school on my conscience since you yourself admitted that you can't teach. We can't let these children suffer from your—excuse me—incompetence. Will you call a geography class, Miss—Schwenckton?"

Did he or did he not hesitate over her name? She could not feel sure.

"But why this passionate interest in geography?" she complained. "Aren't you longing to see me teach spelling? I'll call a spelling class—"

"Geography, if you please."

"I suppose," she said accusingly, "you just want to expose me as not knowing any geography of the United States! Well, if you call that chivalrous—"

"I'm not here to be chivalrous, but to hear you teach."

"Why won't spelling do?"

"I prefer geography."

"Just because I jokingly pretended to think there were forty-seven states instead of fifty-seven!—and told you that when I was a mere child, I thought the Mississippi river ran east and west!"

"Exactly."

"Well," she said reflectively, "well, Mr. Creighton, before I take your request into consideration, will you tell me what is the extent of your power over my job? Can you take it from me?"

"I can advise your school board to take it from you. But," he hastily added, "of course I don't want to! I'd hate like the dickens—" Again he pulled himself up. "I should greatly dislike," he said primly, "to resort to such stringent measures."

"That's better—sounds more professional," she encouraged him. "Be professional or die!"

The children of the school were all seated now—rigidly upright in the presence of that magnate, the county superintendent—and Meely could no longer dally with the situation; she must decide what to do. She might repeat the successful geography lesson she had already given that morning on Italy—though a deliberate repetition of the whole performance would be so astonishing to the children as to be embarrassing to their teacher! For Venice, she had given them the songs of the gondoliers, and impersonations of Portia and Shylock; for Naples, street beggars and coral workers; for Rome, impersonations of Caesar and Mark Antony with tales of gladiators interspersed; for Florence, impersonations of Savonarola and the Medici. Much more than the school had been able to digest at one dose, but she had enjoyed it, feeling how cleverly she was doing it—ah, there was the rub! She did it too cleverly, too professionally. She could not risk offering it to Marvin Creighton.

Well, then, nothing left but to try to give a geography lesson in the prosaic, uninteresting way she had seen it done in a school she had visited, where the teacher, for a weary half hour, had had the children telling glibly what states enclosed other states. What had the teacher called that—a certain word she had used?

"I'll bore this man so he'll keep away from here for the rest of his life!" she determined.

"Zebilla," she addressed the brightest girl of the class that she summoned to stand before the desk, while she and the superintendent now sat behind it, "enclose the state of Pennsylvania."

Zebilla looked blank. "What's that I'm to do?"

"Enclose Pennsylvania," repeated Meely confidently.

Zebilla still looked unenlightened—even dazed. "I wouldn't know how to. I don't know right how you mean—enclose it!"

Meely saw she had gotten the wrong word. "I mean—surround it; tell what states, if any, surround it—or what bodies of water, or whatever does enclose, surround or circumscribe it!" she explained desperately.

"Ach, do you mean, Miss Schwenckton, I'm to bound Pennsylvania?"

"That's the word—yes, bind it."

A snort from the county superintendent was a signal for the amazed school and they broke into a roar of laughter that revealed to the embarrassed teacher how seriously she had erred. Her face flushed crimson. She hated this monster sitting on her platform laughing till the desk shook!

She rapped for order. The school became quiet. "Proceed," she said to Zebilla coldly.

"Pennsyl-wania is bounded on the north—"

When Zebilla had finished, Meely took as long a time as possible in drilling her to pronounce the letter V by catching her lower lip between her teeth. She prolonged this drilling to the point of absurdity, for if she called on any other pupil of this class to bound a state, she herself would have to keep her eyes glued to the map to see that they got it right. With Zebilla Zook that had not been necessary, for Zebilla could be depended upon to answer correctly. She always knew her lessons with depressing thoroughness. So it was not until the poor girl became restive and resentful under her prolonged drilling that the teacher desisted.

"Bind Connecticut, Hiram," she at last proceeded most reluctantly.

"Connecticut is bounded on the north by Massachusetts, on the east by Rhode Island—"

"Oh, come, an island can't bind anything. What is an island, Hiram?" she asked, very pleased at Hiram's blunder, for here she could be sure of her ground; she did at least know the forms of land and water!

"But Rhode Island," said Hiram, gazing at her almost in horror, "a'n't no island—"

Her finger on the map, she could see for herself, now, that it wasn't—and turning hot and cold with consternation, she yet tried to save herself. "Very good, Hiram—I was trying to catch you up! Of course we all know how it came to be called an island? Zebilla?"

But Zebilla, her stand-by, failed her there—she did not know!

"I'll ask the class," said Meely hastily, "to look that up for next lesson."

She feared she was not succeeding in her plot to "bore" the superintendent. She saw, in a quick side glance, that he looked anything but bored. Indeed, he seemed to be enjoying himself. Probably he'd stay the rest of the day! Oh, how she hated and despised him! Conceited pedagogue!

After a few more states had been bound (her eyes and finger fastened the while to the map) she heaved a sigh of relief and dismissed the class to their seats.

"Now you've had your heart's desire and have heard me teach geography. What further," she inquired with dignity, "can I do for you?"

"I leave it to you," he bowed, making no move whatever to go.

She decided to call up a reading class. There were no serious pitfalls for her in American literature. That is, if she could manage to resist the temptation to act out the reading lesson, in case it happened to be a "piece" (as the pupils would say) that lured her to a dramatic execution of it!

She settled that danger by ordering the class to turn to a speech of Theodore Roosevelt's. And too late she realized her mistake. The speech abounded in political allusions which none but a native American would understand. If only no one asked any questions! They so seldom did manifest curiosity about anything—but it would be just like the perversity of fate to inspire one of them to show off before the superintendent.

A hand was raised—the youngest little girl in the class. "Please, Miss Schwenckton, what does G. A. R. mean?"

Meely beamed with pleasure, for this was a question she could, as luck would have it, answer with convincing intelligence. She rejoiced that little Becky had been moved to ask it.

"The G. A. R. is a society of American women," she blithely replied, "the Granddaughters of the American Revolution, whose ancestors came over in the Mayflower."

* * * * * * *

"Well," said Meely icily, as she stood with the superintendent behind her desk at the end of the morning session, "I suppose that awful conscience of yours will force you to advise the school board to discharge me for 'incompetence'!"

They were practically alone now, those of the pupils who did not go home for the noon meal having gone out of doors to eat their luncheon.

Mr. Creighton shook his head. "No, I can't be expected always to act disinterestedly for the good of society—I'm only human, after all—and yours is the only schoolroom I've ever visited that hasn't bored me to death! Whenever I'm dull and need a riot of fun, I can just drop in here and hear you teach geography! No, I cannot rise to such heights of altruism as to recommend your dismissal! It's asking too much! I'm only hu—"

"Well, believe me," she retorted resentfully, "you'll not get a chance to sit 'round here making fun of me—I'll resign!" She turned away haughtily—but she was too good an actress not to know that she was not tall enough to look haughty impressively—and suddenly, without warning, she found herself crying. Desperately she fought to control herself, more mortified at such a childish display than she could possibly feel over perfectly excusable ignorance of a vast patchwork quilt of states, or of the fine distinctions between American alphabetical symbols—D. A. R.'s and G. A. R.'s! Useless information anyway!

But the strain of the morning had been too much for her and she could not stop crying. Her breath came in little gasping sobs, her shoulders heaved; she fumbled for her handkerchief—and not finding it, she jerked open a desk drawer, dragged out a towel and buried her face in it.

"Oh, but my child!—you poor kid!" Mr. Creighton unprofessionally and very remorsefully exclaimed. "I didn't want to hurt your feelings! Oh, please!" he begged in distress, laying a reassuring hand on her arm. "Come, come, don't cry! You're not going to be thrown out of your school—and I swear I won't laugh at you any more!"

She wiped her nose and her eyes with a corner of the towel. "I'd better resign!" she said dolefully, "or you'll be lying awake nights thinking of all the education those children are missing just because you were too weak to withstand a girl's tears!"

"Well," he said ruefully, though gently, "you have got me up a tree, you know! How you ever got a Kutztown Normal school diploma on your knowledge of United States geography—" She showed signs of weeping again, so he hastily veered off. "All right, let's never mention geography again! I do admit that the pupils in your school are more alert and wide-awake than any children in the county! There, doesn't that comfort you?"

She smiled dazzlingly through her tears. "Oh, but then I'm a success as a teacher!—since the whole purpose of teaching children must be to brighten up their wits, not to stuff states and names into them! It is not what I pour into them, but what I lead them to give out!"

"Ah, yes, but there's a lot of necessary drudgery in teaching which can't be side-stepped, my child; which really must be done. So if you'll be good and get down to hard work here—"

"But indeed I do! These things I do, yet do not leave the higher matters of the spirit undone. I do assure you."

He looked skeptical, but evidently did not feel it safe to pursue the subject, her bright eyes looking too ready to shed tears again.

"I'm keeping you from eating your lunch," he suddenly said, reaching reluctantly for his hat and coat.

Bulk Grain Handling Benefit to Farmers

By handling grain in bulk instead of sacks, wheat growers of the Pacific coast, it is authoritatively stated, are saving approximately 10 cents a bushel in operating costs.

Sacked wheat has disappeared almost entirely from export channels at Portland, and bulk handling is rapidly gaining favor in Seattle.

Abandonment of the sack method was advocated by federal market experts when freight rates West were materially reduced by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways, which carry export wheat from the interior to Vancouver.

Able to place their grain in Pacific ports at a much lower cost, Canadian farmers were in position to take the foreign market almost entirely away from American growers unless economic strategy made it possible for them to offer their wheat at a corresponding price.

By discarding the sack method for bulk shipping, says E. N. Ba s, investigator for the federal bureau of agricultural economics, harvesting and handling as well as marketing costs are reduced.

"The farmer," he explains, "is relieved of the yearly sacks and twine bill. High-priced labor for sewing and handling the sacks is eliminated. Grain in bulk can be cleaned and conditioned in the country, saving freight on dockage and enabling the farmer to put on the market a higher grade

Declarer's Play of No Trump

THE following deal illustrates ducking:

	♠—8, 7, 6 ♡—K, 8, 7, 6, 5 ◇—9, 5 ♣—6, 3, 2
♠—10, 2 ♡—Q, 10 ◇—A, J, 8, 4, 3 ♣—Q, 8, 7, 5	N W E S	♠—A, Q, 9, 5, 3 ♡—J, 9, 2 ◇—10, 6 ♣—J, 10, 4
	♠—K, J, 4 ♡—A, 4, 3 ◇—K, Q, 7, 2 ♣—A, K, 9

South deals and bids one no trump, as he has a particularly good hand with all four suits protected and four and a half quick tricks. All pass and south becomes the declarer.

West leads his fourth best diamond, the four. Dummy is spread on the table and declarer looks over the two hands. The prospect is not very good. He can see two tricks in each of the three suits, hearts, diamonds and clubs; but his spades are very doubtful. His only hope of game is in the heart suit and the only way to establish and make dummy's small hearts is by the play called "ducking" which he decides to try.

The deal is played as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	D4	D5	D10	DK
2	H10	H5	H2	HA
3	HQ	H6	H9	H3
4	DA	D9	D6	D2
5	DJ	C2	C4	DQ
6	S2	HK	HJ	H4
7	C5	H8	S3	D7
8	S10	H7	C10	C9
9	C7	C6	CJ	CA
10	C8	C3	S5	CK
11	D3	S6	SA	SK
12	D8	S7	SQ	S4
13	CQ	S8	S9	SJ

Declarer makes three odd tricks.

Declarer ducks the third trick by playing low in dummy in order to save his King to take the third round of hearts and thus make dummy's remaining cards in the suit. At trick 9 he considers the advisability of leading a spade but decides against it because West may hold the Ace; in which case game would be lost because of West's two good diamonds. At trick 11 declarer knew that West did not have any spades because he could place him with the Queen of clubs and two diamonds; therefore by leading the King of Spades declarer with quite sure to get one more trick.

The following deal illustrates the use of the informatory double in the bidding; and the choice of opening lead and the use of the echo in the play:

	♠—A, 10, 9, 2 ♡—J, 3 ◇—A, K, 8 ♣—Q, J, 10, 5
♠—8, 4 ♡—K, Q, 10, 9, 8, 5 ◇—Q, 3 ♣—A, K, 8	N W E S	♠—Q, 6, 3 ♡—7, 6, 4, 2 ◇—10, 6, 4, 2 ♣—7, 4
	♠—K, J, 7, 5 ♡—A ◇—J, 9, 7, 5 ♣—9, 6, 3, 2

West deals and bids one heart. North has the other three suits all protected and three and a half quick tricks; so he doubles. East passes and South bids two Spades. West bids three hearts and North three spades, which ends the bidding.

West has an Ace King combination which is the most desirable for an opening lead, and he therefore leads the King of clubs in preference to his long heart suit. Dummy is spread and declarer makes a survey. He must finesse his trumps and can do so either way. He has two diamond tricks, and one heart and possibly two in clubs but cannot see enough to go game. He plays the hand as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	CK	C5	C7	C2
2	CA	C10	C4	C3
3	C8	CJ	S3	C6
4	H5	H3	H7	HA
5	S4	SA	S6	S5
6	S8	S2	SQ	SK
7	D3	DA	D2	D5
8	DQ	DK	D4	D7
9	H8	D8	D6	D9
10	H9	HJ	D10	DJ
11	H10	CQ	H2	C9
12	HQ	S10	H4	S7
13	HK	S9	H6	SJ

Declarer wins four odd tricks.

East used the echo on the first two tricks, and therefore West led clubs a third time although the Queen was in dummy. This made one extra trick for East and West. At trick 4 East properly led his partner's suit as this also was leading up to the weakness in dummy. The fall of the Queen of diamonds on trick 8 enabled declarer to finesse his nine spot at trick 9 and so obtain four tricks in diamonds and four odd on the deal.

Bulgar's Folk Song

The most striking part of the Bulgarian folk song is . . . the tune, wild and mournful, in a scale neither pure minor nor major, but partaking of both. The time is strange; 5-4 and 7-4 are common, and irregular measures much more frequent than in western Europe. As is often the way among peasant singers, the songs are pitched high, and sometimes a refrain is broken by shrill cries; there is no yodeling. The melodies are short and the repetitions many. Of course, these generalizations do not take us far; simple minor and major tunes and jog trot rhythms may also be heard, but are not frequent or characteristic.—Elizabeth Marriage Mincoff in the Cornhill Magazine, England.

Portrait of a Lady

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

NADINE made her way swiftly toward the gallery in which the portrait of her mother was hung. She could scarcely walk for excitement. To Nadine's hungry eyes it was not only the Portrait of a Lady by Van Dyne—it was the likeness of her very own precious mother.

Nadine's shabby little costume and well-worn shoes were distinct evidence that she was no longer of the wealthy class that her family had known when the portrait was painted. She remembered the painting as it had always hung in the wonderful old drawing room of their English home.

Her father had been one of the first brave men to fall for his king and country and after that the precious mother went on to join the husband she had loved and Nadine was left alone—practically penniless and homeless. The portrait had been bought by a wealthy American who, rumor had it, had since lost his fortune. Nadine knew little about the story except that the picture was now in the Metropolitan museum, whither Nadine had come to see it.

It was ten years since she had seen it and now, so far away from the old home, and hanging here among the hundreds of famous paintings, the portrait of Nadine's mother brought with it a throng of memories so poignant that it was small wonder Nadine felt shaky.

It was students' day at the Metropolitan and there was an artist making a most divine sketch from the portrait. The young man was standing beside him.

The beautiful lady of the portrait seemed to smile softly down at Nadine. She fancied her mother's white hand moved as if she would caress her daughter's wistful face.

"Mother, mother mine," cried Nadine, and fell limply to the floor.

When she opened her eyes she was looking into those of the old artist who had been sketching her mother's portrait.

"My dear child," he said, "you're not well—you shouldn't be out alone."

"Oh, I'm quite all right," smiled Nadine wanly. "I hadn't seen my mother's portrait for ten years—and it almost seemed as if she smiled at me." She looked up more brightly, "It was silly of me."

"It wasn't silly at all," said the young man, "I feel almost like doing the same when I come here. My uncle owned that portrait for years—until the crash came—and it was like parting with one's own flesh and blood when it was removed from the old home. He—my uncle—loved—her—loved her long before she married your father. He bought the portrait when—when it had to be sold. I have looked at it every day for nearly ten years and—worshiped her, too."

"Life is a very strange affair," said the artist with a shake of the head. "Here are you two young people, from different sides of the ocean, meeting before a portrait which has been lost to both of you and each emotionally upset by the personality radiating from it. Your mother must have been an extraordinarily lovely young woman," he continued and glancing straight into Nadine's eyes he added tenderly, "and her daughter—well, my dear—you could sit for the portrait—"

Nadine blushed and hid the light in her eyes.

The young man had been standing silently listening but his eyes had never left Nadine's face. It seemed as if the entire world of joy had been suddenly tossed into his lap, so wonderful was the expression on his face.

"And I have come back to the land of my mother's birth," said Nadine, "and have taken a position. I hope to make good," she added shyly.

"You will," the artist told her, "and you're going to be very good to an old man and let him paint a portrait of you—perhaps it may hang beside this one by Van Dyne—a companion portrait."

"Then you are—," cried Nadine swiftly.

"Yes, my dear—I am Van Dyne, and I, too—loved your mother. Every soul who knew her—loved her and now—you will both come to my studio to have dinner and celebrate this wonderful meeting."

Up on the wall of the Metropolitan the Lady of the Portrait smiled down upon the trio but the Mother Spirit of the portrait took her daughter in her arms and whispered softly in her ear, "Be happy, my sweet. We're watching over you and have guided you to your love. Put your hand in his when the time comes and fear not poverty nor anything the world can do to you, for love overcomes all fear. Smile, my love, he's waiting to see your smile."

Nadine looked into young Chatwood's eyes and smiled, then all three went out of the gallery with the knowledge that a supreme moment had been given them and that even portraits can speak.

Ancient Sanctuaries

The word asylum comes from the Latin word asylon, meaning right of sanctuary, refuge or a place from violence. In ancient times sacred places, especially the temples and the altars of the gods, were appointed as asylums to which criminals as well as persecuted individuals might flee for refuge, and to molest them in such places was regarded as an impiety.

Warns of Vesuvius

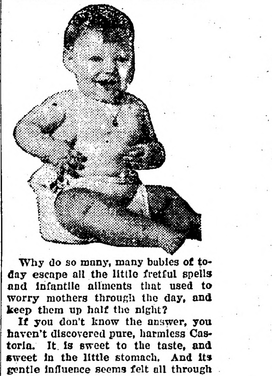
Dr. Akitune Imamura is known as the leading seismologist of the Far East and is called by some scientists the greatest in the world. He has recently made a very careful examination of Mount Vesuvius in Italy and believes it is due for a serious outburst. He says Japan was not expected to experience a great earthquake disaster similar to that of 1923 for at least another century.

Atmospheric Pressure

The normal atmospheric pressure on the body at sea level is 14.7 pounds per square inch, but it gradually decreases with altitude, according to an answered question in Liberty.

When it comes to saving pennies a woman will save a hundred before a man has saved ten cents.

The BABY



Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

SOMETHING GOOD

A NICE salad which may be served at any meal after breakfast is:

Fruit Salad.

Arrange six halved pears, fresh if possible; if not well-drained canned ones, on nests of lettuce with a spoonful of halved grapes and pour over the Pineapple Dressing.

Take the juice from a can of pineapple, warm and add two tablespoonfuls of butter well blended with one tablespoonful of flour; add two egg yolks well beaten, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, and cook until smooth and thick. Add the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs and mix well. Then set away to cool. Add one-half cupful of whipped cream and serve.

Apple Pudding.

Grate six greening apples, add eight crumbed macaroons, one cupful of milk, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, five beaten eggs and a few grains of salt. Butter a mold, pour the mixture into it, dot with butter and bake in a moderate oven until firm. Unmold and serve with plain cream.

Veal Loaf.

Mix the following ingredients together thoroughly: Three pounds of ground veal, one chopped onion, two cupfuls of bread crumbs, three teaspoonfuls of salt, two eggs, the juice of a lemon or one cupful of tomato juice and three-fourths of a pound of fat pork ground. Make into a long roll, place in a baking pan, rub with lemon juice and bake in a hot oven for an hour, basting often with the juices from the pan. Serve with:

Creole Sauce.

To one-half cupful of rich white sauce, prepared by using one tablespoonful each of butter and flour, cook and add one-half cupful of rich milk, add two tablespoonfuls of minced onion, four of green pepper. Add one small can of tomato soup just before serving. Add seasonings to suit the taste.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

NAPOLEON

NAPOLEON is a man worth thinking about. What he said and wrote is worth thinking about. So for the most part we are letting this article be written by Napoleon.

On the morning of his death he said: "There is nothing terrible in death; he has been about my pillow for the last three weeks and now he is about to take me away forever."

There will come a time when all of us will think about death, and if Napoleon could think pleasantly in exile, we ought to be able to think pleasantly in freedom.

"Those should possess knowledge who aspire to assume the command over others."

Napoleon believed in fate. He said: "It is not written on high that I am to perish by the hands of the Arabs," and he made his escape.

At another time he said to an officer: "My friend, if that ball were destined for you, it would be sure to find you, though you were to burrow a hundred feet under ground."

But if Napoleon believed in fate, it never interfered with his belief that he could accomplish what he set out to do.

Of Lennes, who entered the army as a volunteer, and died marshal of France, Napoleon said: "I found him a dwarf, and left him a giant."

Napoleon found himself a dwarf and made of himself the greatest military commander that ever lived, unless it be Julius Caesar.

"From the sublime to the ridiculous there is but a step." Of all the things which Napoleon said, he was fondest and proudest of this one sentence.

When Madame de Stael asked Napoleon whom he considered the greatest woman in the world, his reply was: "Her who has borne the most children." This ought to be satisfying to the American mothers of big families.

There is disagreement as to the last words that Napoleon uttered. According to one authority, his words constituted a broken sentence, "My God! . . . and the French nation . . . My son . . . Head of the army . . . France! France!"

According to another authority the last word which he spoke was the name of Josephine.

The most eloquent thing ever said or written of Napoleon was Robert Ingersoll's description of the tomb of Napoleon under the dome of the Invalides in Paris. In the last paragraph of that magnificent, but brief description, Ingersoll said: "I would rather have been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes; I would rather have lived in a hut with a vine growing over the door, and the grapes growing purple in the amorous kisses of the autumn sun; I would rather have been that poor peasant, with my wife by my side, knitting, as the day died out of the sky, with my children upon my knees and their arms about me; I would rather have been this man and gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust than to have been that imperial impersonator of force and murder known as Napoleon the Great."

With intense artificial light that rivaled sunshine, a French biologist has succeeded in growing three generations of beets in a single year. The powerful illumination caused the plants to go to seed more rapidly, and the seed to germinate in far less time than usual.

HOMESICK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I THOUGHT that homesick meant to be
Away from home, across the sea,
Or 'way off on a railroad train
To Manitoba or to Maine.
I thought that homesick was to leave
The place you live, and grieve and grieve,
I thought you really had to roam,
That homesick meant away from home.

But here I am, in my own bed,
My own chintz curtains overhead,
My own bright carpet on the floor,
My own red rocker by the door.
Outside I see the same green grass,
Outside I see the neighbors pass,
And yet I'm just the lonesomest
That anybody ever guessed.

You see, Aunt Molly's taken worse,
And so they left me with a nurse,
And kissed me twice, and said be good,
Hurried as fast as people could
When some one brought a telegram,
And they're away, and here I am,
And her hat's gone, and so is his,
And now I know what homesick is.

For homesick isn't being far
Across the sea, like some folks are;
It isn't when you're East or West
You really get the homesickest.
It's when you're home, but home like this,
And—well, when lots of things you miss;
It's when you're home, like me today,
And Mother and Father miles away.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SCARING SCREECH-OWLS

EVERYBODY knows, of course, that to hear a screech-owl sounding his melancholy note in the darkness of the night is a bad omen. It fortells misfortune at least—some people say death in the family. It is an idea of primitive man, exists today among all savage peoples who know the owl or its congeners and lingers in the superstitions of civilized races. But as every bane is said to have its antidote the evil effects of the owl's hooting may be warded off if you only use the right magic.

The directions for counteracting the evil omen of the hooting owl differ in different parts of the country; but they all appear to have as a basis the idea of reversal which the ancients freely incorporated in their magic formulas. One way is to take off your shoe and turn it upside down. Then the owl will flee away and no harm will ensue. In one section they say that taking off some article of clothing, like your coat, for instance, and putting it on again "wrong side out," will have the same effect. And in another you are advised to turn your pockets "wrong side out."

The idea is this: The hooting of the owl would, in the natural course of things, produce misfortune. It is natural to wear your coat "right side out," and your shoe, of course, must be worn with the sole down. Now, reverse this natural order. Turn the shoe sole up, the coat wrong side out, and arrange the pockets in the reverse position from the natural one. This sets up a counter current as it were—the natural course of things is reversed and, by sympathy, there is reversed, also, the ordinary effects of the owl's hooting.

This idea of reversals in primitiv magic is manifested in various superstitions of long descent. It was this idea which caused witches to work baleful spells by repeating the Lord's Prayer backwards.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE PROUD WOOD FAMILY

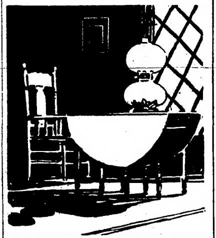
A TABLE and a lamp and a chair were talking when all was quiet in the house.

All the members of the family had gone to bed, for the table and the lamp and the chair could never have talked if anyone had been around to hear them.

Although, it is true, no one could have understood them, for the talk of a table and a lamp and a chair is very strange. Only the objects themselves can understand what they say.

"I am very nice," said the lamp. "Of course I suppose I should be more modest and wait for some one else to compliment me, but if I did wait I might have to wait too long, and that would never do.

"I think I shall always make sure of being complimented by not waiting for others to compliment me, but by complimenting myself. Don't you think that shows wisdom?"



"I Suppose I Should Be More Modest," Said the Lamp.

"Doubtless it does, doubtless it does," said the table.

"But of course, lamp," the table continued, "you're not so nice when you haven't been filled. You're an oil lamp, and you have to be filled quite often."

"I'm not nice when I'm not filled," said the lamp. "That is perfectly true. But, then, it is not my fault. I cannot fill myself with oil.

"I have to be carried out to the woodhouse where the oil is kept and filled there, and I can't do that myself. One would hardly expect all

"So I say 'never expect too much and then you won't be disappointed.' I don't suppose that thought is original with me, but, then, though I'm a bright lamp when lighted, I'm not supposed to think up great and wise things.

"I give cheer during the long winter evenings. And if, by chance, I have not been filled and so go out, I'm sorry about it.

"I hate to hear the disappointed people say:

"'Oh, dear, that lamp was forgotten again today.' Yes, it makes me sad."

"Well," said the table, "I am what might be called a proud piece of wood. Not only am I used to hold books and games and you, my good friend lamp, but when people want to have good luck they knock on me."

"They do the same to me," said the chair. "I'm glad I'm a wooden chair, for I heard of a dentist's chair which was far from being a favorite.

"In fact, a little girl made up these lines about it:

"It takes a lot of do and dare
To actually go to a dentist's chair,
But once you're really truly there,
You feel as brave as a fine big bear."

"Of course she showed by that verse that while she was proud of herself after she went to the dentist's chair she didn't actually feel any love or affection for the chair!

"But when people say:

"'I haven't had a cold for six months,' they knock on me to make sure that their boasting won't bring them one. I don't suppose it means anything, but it's a nice compliment to the Wood family.

"Indeed it is," said the table, "and so I think the Wood family may well be proud of itself. I know I am. I feel as pleased as can be when people give me a little rap when they've boasted as though I'd protect them and see that their good luck continued.

"All nonsense, perhaps, but it's a source of joy to the family, and so while creatures call me a table I think of myself always as PROUD WOOD!"

KEEPING A BUDGET

BUDGETING one's income may seem a perilous undertaking, but it pays in worth-while dividends. Nothing is so easy to do as to spend money and nothing so difficult as to account for what is spent.

A prominent manufacturer refuses to retain upon his pay roll the name of an employee who does not save at least 10 per cent of his income every year. The result is that he has a force of employees who are happy, successful and efficient. To know that one is ahead of the game is a very important factor in creating essentials of a successful workman.

Nothing quite so much takes the heart out of a person as debt. Living by a hand-to-mouth method, never getting ahead, creates no enthusiasm in the art of living.

Allocate your income. Live within the amounts set aside for each purpose in the budget. The satisfaction of accomplishing this more than compensates for the sacrifice. Buying on the installment plan has proven the ruin of many a home. Necessities can easily be bought for cash. Luxuries are usually acquired by deferred payments. Luxuries become necessities when cash is available for their possession.

Avoid debt like a nightmare. Purchase what you can pay for out of the budget. The sooner we cease to mortgage our personal efficiency by trying to pay for things we cannot afford the happier and more successful we shall be.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"BRAND NEW"

THE expression "bran new" or more correctly "brand new" to describe something that is quite new and has never been used, is a good example of the wealth of color that lies concealed in language and is disclosed when we trace to their origins some of our most commonly used words and expressions.

The modern use of "brand new" takes its origin in the Old world "brand" meaning a torch, which retains its significance today, its derivation being from the Anglo-Saxon "to burn."

An old expression familiar in Shakespeare was "fire new," the reference being to the obvious newness of metals just from the fire. The following is a quotation from "Richard III," which illustrates the old use of the phrase:

"Your fire-new stamp of honor is scarce current."

From "fire-new" it is easily comprehensible how "brand new" came into being with its obvious significance, buried from view in modern speech.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

THAT HUMAN WALL

ANYBODY who is experienced in the art of getting through the human wall of subordinates which surrounds most important persons knows two things.

The first is that in six cases out of ten, these subordinates are either arrogant or incompetent.

The second is that subordinates should never be dealt with if their superiors can be reached.

The human wall is necessary or it would not be tolerated. Important people must be protected from time-stealers, respectable beggars and cranks. But that does not mean that it is not a cumbersome and annoying affair.

• • •

The mere fact that a subordinate is associated with an important person often seems to lend him tremendous insolence.

It is his job to keep out undesirables. And he often comes to consider all visitors undesirables.

To deny admission to strangers seems to augment his own prestige. He becomes, in his own eyes, a disposer of fates and a dispenser of favors.

If you ask him if he thinks his employer will condescend to receive you, he will say "No!" He will also be glad to volunteer any information about the state of his employer's mind. The information will be of a sort designed to discourage presumption on your part and to glorify the employer and his loyal servant. It will also be inaccurate in four cases out of five.

• • •

If a subordinate is not arrogant he is very likely to be incompetent.

He may be pleasant enough but he will not know how to deal with your case. That, however, will not prevent him from making a brave attempt.

Once in a great while you meet a part of one of these human walls who is neither arrogant nor incompetent. But such persons do not remain a part of the wall. They usually are promoted.

If subordinates realized how little arrogance helped their cause they would put more emphasis on courtesy.

An insolent, overbearing manner seldom wins any friends. And you must have business friends if you expect to get ahead.

There are a few geniuses whose talent is so great that they can afford to go through the world antagonizing everybody. But how many of us are geniuses?

• • •

An insolent door clerk or secretary serves his employer badly. And occasionally the stranger whom he attempts to snub turns out to be a person of considerable more importance than the man behind the human wall. In that case it is likely to go hard with the subordinate.

Arrogance may feed a man's ego for a while. But it will nearly always hurt his chances of success in the end.

So much for the arrogant ones. As for the incompetents little need be said. The world doesn't like incompetence much, either.

FLAPPER GRANDMA AT THE WHEEL

WITH her beautifuly coifed white hair, her slim, erect figure and fashionable clothes she is one of the youngest in our crowd as to fun and energy, and because she is eighty years young and so full of "pep," we call her our flapper.

Natalie and her grandmother are real chums which is a pretty good thing for Natalie, who needs a real chum. Spoiled beyond all reason when she was younger, as she neared maturity her parents, realizing their error, began to surround her with just as unreasonable restrictions and inhibitions, and of course there was war.

Things would have been much worse, but about two years ago her grandmother broke up her home and came to live with her son's family. She acted as a sort of buffer between the girl and her parents, pouring oil on the troubled domestic waters, and with her tact and sympathy winning the rebellious girl's confidence.

They go about together a great deal, and though the older woman must often long to stay quietly at home, she never says so. Natalie is tremendously proud of her and loves to take her around. "Why, grandma," she will exclaim, "if you would just get your face lifted you would not look a day over fifty!"

"And lose that face eighty years of real living has given to me? I'm afraid I cannot do that, dear. I am used to this face; I have lived with it a long time. Did you ever see a 'lifted' face that had any more expression than a wax doll?"

Natalie was twenty last summer, when Travers Stanton came into her life. He was good looking, and had a soft caressing way with women that made the girls rave over him, and caused the men to grind out muttered curses.

Natalie's father disliked Stanton instinctively and peremptorily forbade her having anything to do with him. Of course Stanton immediately became very intriguing to the willful girl's fancy, though before that she had scarcely noticed him.

For the first time her grandmother remonstrated with Natalie. Hitherto she had regarded her romantic escapades with amused sympathy, but her experience warned that Stanton was a different proposition from the young sheiks who had swarmed around the girl.

This man was much older, subtle, and she felt, dangerous. She tried to warn Natalie, with the result that the infatuated girl shut her, too, from her confidence.

Grandma was in despair. She disliked to betray Natalie to her parents and she was convinced that her darling was in danger. She was persuaded that she was meeting Stanton clandestinely, and she had not lived eighty years for nothing.

One evening she sat in her room, trying to decide on some plan of action that would open the girl's eyes. Natalie's parents had gone for a motor ride and she and her granddaughter were alone in the house. As she sat musing she heard an automobile stop in front of the house and heard Natalie run downstairs. She reached a window in time to see her getting into a closed car, and in the faint light she recognized Stanton.

For an instant she stood rigid, overcome by an overwhelming sense of danger, then with a swift prayer for help she hurried down the stairs. In the garage stood a small runabout, which she and Natalie used frequently, and which Natalie had coaxed her into learning to drive.

"Just think," she urged, "of learning to drive at eighty, and besides, who knows but something might happen that you would have to drive!"

It was happening now, grandma thought grimly, as she backed the little car out and started it in the direction taken by the other one. The closed car was out of sight, but she took the direction, knowing it was the only paved road leading to the country.

She was not nervous. The thought of danger to Natalie swallowed up all sense of personal danger or even possibility of failure. Of course, she would catch them. She must!

Finally, her straining eyes caught a red beam far ahead, and that prescience on which she had always relied, told her it was quarry. She increased the speed and seemed getting closer, when the light disappeared.

Her heart almost stopped in her despair. What should she do? She was driving the little car at its utmost speed, and they had outspeeded her. Then she remembered that there was a by-road ahead which Natalie had pointed out to her. A road little traveled and overhung with trees. Natalie had laughingly told her it was called "Peter's Paradise Road." She would find them there.

She drove on till she came to the turn, yes, there in the distance was a red tail light, and it had stopped. The next moment it had winked out. This road was rough, and grandma had hard work driving. She had put out her light and with the motor running almost noiselessly, crept along till she caught the faint outline of the other car about three hundred feet ahead. Then she steered to the roadside and switched off her lights.

For a few moments grandma sat rubbing her cramped hands, and debating how to proceed. Then she slipped from the car and crept toward the other one. The ground was rough and she stumbled frequently and twice she fell, but got up and went on, but when near the other car fell headlong. She lay quiet a moment and when she tried to rise found to her dismay that her ankle would not bear her weight.

It was plain she could not walk, neither could she remain there so, though every movement hurt her sorely, she crawled on hands and knees toward the other car. She could always laugh at herself, and even in her pain and anxiety she smiled at the thought that perhaps she was stalking the wrong car.

But as she came closer she knew that she was not. She heard Natalie's voice and it was raised angrily. "I tell you I want you to drive back onto the main road and take me home at once. How dare you bring me here?"

The man laughed softly and said something, but grandma could not catch the words. Then Natalie spoke shrilly: "If you dare to touch me I'll scream!"

He laughed. "Scream your pretty head off. Who do you think will hear you? Do you think you are going to make a fool out of me, stringing me along and letting me blow myself on you? Now be nice! Oh! you would, would you? Well, I hate to be rough, but—" There was a muffled scream, and grandma opened the car door.

"Come Natalie, I have the little car here, let us go home!" With a sob of relief the terrified girl sprang out and the baffled Stanton, without a word, started his motor. Grandma held onto the door for a moment.

"A word to you young man. If you are not out of this town by tomorrow night, Natalie's father shall learn of this, and if he does—Lord help you. I know you are a villain; I don't think you are a fool!"

It was a contrite and humble girl who almost carried her grandmother to the runabout. Grandma sat white and suffering in her seat, but she uttered no reproaches. She never preached, but Natalie would have welcomed a tirade rather than that look of suffering. Her parents had reached home before them, and they were astounded when grandma limped in on Natalie's arm.

"Why mother! Whatever is the matter? How did you hurt yourself?" they exclaimed.

"Oh, I was silly enough to try to do the charleston! At my age, too!" lied grandma gallantly. "Poor Natalie is heartbroken; she blames herself." As she saw them turn to the distressed girl, "I think we flappers have both learned a lesson!"

And with her arms around her grandmother Natalie whispered in her ear: "Oh, granny darling, I promise you that I have!"

Few Workers Realize Distance They Walk

Not all long-distance hikers are sprinting along the highways, says the Boston Traveler. An average calculated from the daily walking mileage of a diverse group, including salesgirls, dancers, waiters, children at play, conductors, policemen, postmen and stenographers amounted to the surprising figure of 18,098 steps, or 7⅞ miles.

It was found that a housekeeper walks every year a distance equal to that from Boston to San Francisco. A doctor in a hospital walked 18 miles a day—and he used a car outdoors. A salesgirl walked 8 miles, and a head waiter's pedometer ticked off 12½ miles in a working day. Golf is effective in making the indolent step, for in playing 18 holes the golfer hikes 8½ miles. An active schoolboy goes about 15½ miles a day, while a train conductor walked 7 miles picking up tickets between Boston and Cleveland.

Prehistoric Medicine

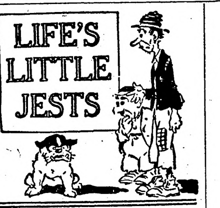
Tubes of soft soapstone used by a prehistoric Indian shaman, or medicine man, to heal the sick have been unearthed near San Diego, Calif., says Science. First blowing clouds of smoke through these tubes over the body of a patient, the medicine man pretended he could see into the body. The patient was told he had been bewitched by an enemy who had injected into his body a magical substance which changed into a toad, snake, rock or other object. Having located the object, the shaman pretended to pluck it out, producing as evidence, by slight-of-hand, the offending substance.

Resourceful Alligator

The Indians on the banks of the Oronoco assert that previously to an alligator going in search of prey it always swallows a large stone, that it may acquire additional weight to aid it in diving and dragging its victims under water. A traveler being somewhat incredulous on this point, to convince himself, shot several with his rifle, and in all of them were found stones varying in weight according to the size of the animal. The largest killed was about 17 feet in length, and had within him a stone weighing about 60 or 70 pounds.

"One Way Windows"

By adding to glass extremely thin films of gold, an English inventor, S. Cowper Cowles, has found a means of making "one-way windows," says Popular Science Monthly. They are said to be transparent and of a pleasing greenish color to a person looking out, but one trying to look in sees only an opaque burnished gold panel.



LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

"Well," replied the manager, slowly, "all I can say is that if ever you are put in prison for acting it will be a grave miscarriage of justice."

"Choate Did"

One of the stories about Joseph Choate, which is being retold with the passing of Charles F. Choate, runs something like this:

"I have never smoked a cigar in my life," said the first Mr. Choate. "I never play poker and I never saw a horse race."

Up spoke Senator Walcott of Colorado, "I wish I could say that!"

"You can; Choate did," piped up Speaker of the House Reed.

Vegetable Extract Latest

Extracts of vegetables similar to certain extracts of meat have appeared in Europe. They are actually the real vegetables subjected to a process which, after several years of experiment, has made it possible to preserve all the essentials of lettuce, celery, potatoes, cabbage, onions and other products of the garden in concentrated form. They are said to be especially suitable for soup, one pound of the extract making 60 cups. Domestic and tropical fruits will be added later.

5,800 AMERICANS STUDY IN FRANCE

Most of Them Working in Arts or Liberal Arts.

Paris.—Though college yells are missing and university grid teams unknown, American students are flocking to France by the thousands to round out their education, statistics revealed by the American University union in Paris show.

Exactly 5,870 Yankee students are enrolled in French universities, and the vast majority are working in the arts or the liberal arts, the report divulges.

The University of Paris, of course, leads all other institutions, with 1,069 Americans enrolled. Of this number, 1,031 are in the school of letters, 742 taking the special course de civilisation, which was specially designed by the rector of the university to give the American student a general and broad view of European and especially French culture.

Forty-eight are in the Sorbonne preparatory school and the other 241 are scattered through the other departments of the Sorbonne. Sixteen Americans are law students in France's greatest law school, sixteen in the medical college, and six in the science medical college, and six in the sciences.

The charm of Grenoble, lying in the snow-capped Alps, attracts 89 Americans to the University of Grenoble, with 263 more attending the summer school there. Several hundred other students are scattered about such provincial cities as Poitiers, Tour, Dijon, Toulouse, Nancy, Bordeaux, Rennes and Lyons, this number preferring student life in the provinces, where they have greater opportunity to come directly in touch with French people and where their progress in the language is accordingly more rapid.

The Alliance Francaise, a school devoted exclusively to instruction of foreigners in the French language, has more Americans than all other nationalities put together. Seven hundred and fifty-six are enrolled there.

Rat Killing Profession of Two College Girls

New York.—Overcoming the feminine aversion to rodents, two college girls, Miss Helen Caldwell, graduate of the University of West Virginia and Miss Evelyn Wagar, graduate of the University of Minnesota, have adopted rat killing as a profession.

"We have already exterminated rats in important cities in 39 of the United States, two provinces in Canada, Hawaii, Alaska and many Mexican border cities," Miss Caldwell said. "As we travel in our own automobile we have had much sightseeing and pleasure as well as profit out of our profession, and we can recommend it to other college girls."

Miss Caldwell got her original idea from a community rat drive in Virginia, during which she learned the use of barium carbonate, the most effective rat poison known, from her study of chemistry in college.

Job of Headsman Is Attraction to Many

Paris.—A deaf and dumb hairdresser is among many candidates for the job of executioner of France. The job, to their disappointment, isn't open, for Anatole Diebler, who inherited it, doesn't intend to resign. Besides the coiffeur, a boxer, a lawyer, three engineers, and a bridge builder have asked for the appointment as headsman, a mechanical trade now, since the guillotine does the work.

Deibler, believing in heredity in office, but having no son, is meantime training his nephew to set up the "widow," as the machine is called, and to press the button that drops the triangular blade. He hopes thus to offer a well-trained man as his successor when the time comes for him to retire to the country and "plant his cabbages," the ambition of the French bourgeoisie.

Toss Away Your Hammer and Read of This Old Boy

Yosemite National Park, Calif.—"Old Horny," the freak Yosemite deer, has again sprouted the extra horn growing out from his snout which caused his being named the rhino buck or unicorn deer.

When he first grew this extra spike, and shed it with his regular antlers, there was much speculation as to whether it would come back when the new antlers grew out. It has—this time a two-pointed one in place of the spike of last year.

Old Horny is a well-developed specimen of the mule deer, apparently normal except for his twisted, irregularly branched antlers and the rhinoceroslike spiked snout.

Gosh!

VET'S NAME ON LIST OF DEAD; HE'S ALIVE

Southern Boy Surprised at Finding Mistake.

Charlotte, N. C.—James W. Pegram, young Guilford county man, has proved to the satisfaction of the World war veterans and the Red Cross that he did not die while enlisted for that memorable conflict.

Pegram has been on the list of Guilford county's war dead since shortly after the armistice. His name is third from the top on one of the two bronze plates flanking the entrance of the stadium which has been erected at Greensboro in honor of the slain soldiers.

Could Apply Himself.

These facts didn't prevent Pegram from walking into the office of the Red Cross and explaining that the reason his parents had not applied for adjusted compensation was because he was not a dead man and could apply for himself.

December 31 was the final date on which applications for adjusted compensation could be made, and as a part of the government's aid to the ex-soldier and his family, the Red Cross and the American Legion had been trying for a year to get Pegram's father and mother to apply for the benefit to which they would have been entitled if their son had been dead.

Pegram said his father and mother had been receiving letters from Miss Marion Crawford of the Red Cross, but that they considered it either a joke or a mistake, and had not taken the trouble to correct it.

Pegram has been employed for some years at a factory in Greensboro. He said a fellow workman told him last spring that his name was on the tablet, but Pegram thought the man was joking.

Helped Work on Stadium.

He himself helped to haul the steel reinforcement for the stadium, but he did not chance to attend the dedication exercises when the names of the World war dead were read, and did not notice the appearance of his name in the newspapers carrying the story of the dedication.

Pegram's name was placed on the war dead roll as the result of information furnished by some person whose identity is not now remembered. McDaniel Lewis compiled the list for the stadium tablets on information compiled by the Greensboro public library.

Pegram's will be taken from the tablet, and the name of another Guilford soldier who died in the war, and news of whose death did not reach the veterans' organization until after the stadium was built, will be inserted in its place.

British Company After $60,000,000 Treasure

London.—A romantic story of £12,000,000 (about $60,000,000) in supposedly buried treasure consisting of gold, silver and diamonds is behind the Sacambaya Exploration company, which has been floated in London to operate in Inquisivi province, Bolivia.

The treasure is said to have been buried in 1778 by Jesuits, who were not permitted by the Spanish to take it from the country. It is supposed to be guarded by a threat of "a dolorous death" for those who disturb it. Its reputed location is based on a parchment map.

Edgar Sanders, a mining engineer, plans to leave Liverpool in March with an expedition of engineers to hunt for the treasure, 75 per cent of which goes to the expedition and 25 per cent to the owners of the land.

Flesh Pink Rules for Spring Lingerie

New York.—Spring styles in lingerie have been displayed at the Hotel Astor under the auspices of the United Women's Wear League of America. Most of the models featured a waistline, a close-fitting bodice and a full flaring silhouette.

Flesh pink was the outstanding hue, while there was also a noticeable array of printed silks in underwear and pajamas. The bridal lingerie set comprised four pieces, with ivory satin for the negligee and nightgown and cream satin for the slip and combination.

Novelties in the pajama line included vagabond trousers and an affair consisting of a seven-eighths length coat of gold lace with shirred peach-colored satin sleeves, a surplice, satin bodice and satin trousers.

Big Organizations Seen Controlling U. S. Trade

London.—Presiding at the annual meeting of Barclays bank, one of the largest in England, Frederick C. Goodenough said that trade returns of the United States showed that although the total exports were increasing, yet over the period there had been a gradual decline in proportion in agricultural produce and raw material exported except in certain commodities, including oil, which continued to increase.

This and the large and increasing number of failures in America, he said, suggested that industry in that country was passing into the hands of big organizations. He thought that in the future America would become increasingly dependent on the export of manufactured articles rather than of raw products.

ANIMAL LIFE SPAN IS 7 TIMES GROWTH

Horse Should Live to 28, Man to 147.

Newark, N. J.—In the animal kingdom, the biological engineers have it the span of life usually is seven times the period of growth. For instance, the life of a horse is 28 years, seven times the period of growth, and the span of the chicken, 49 months, figures out the same way.

Man matures in 21 years, and seven times that is just short of 150. We should live that long, but don't. Why? Disease, explained Dr. Roy Schaffer, a lecturer, before the Woman's club of Glen Ridge.

"If you go back in history, we find that the average life of the Romans was 18 years. This meant some neglect from the time of birth to death. The average life in America in 1800 was 32 years, in 1900, 45 years, and 57½ years in 1926. In a little more than a century we have almost doubled the expectation of life by taking proper care of our children," he said.

"New York doctors have determined to eradicate diphtheria by 1930, and you can help to do this by using the Schick and other tests. Take an interest in the reports from your school medical inspectors; analyze them and do not pass snap judgment on them. In these ways your organization can make great progress in furthering civilization. A stronger spark of life will be passed on to our children and our boys and girls may live 150 happy years."

Italian Marble Now Is Mined in Colorado

Denver, Colo.—Travertine, a rare building stone, found heretofore only in Italian quarries near Tivoli, has been discovered and is now being produced in a marketable quantity from a quarry near Salida, 75 miles southwest of Denver.

J. J. Kerr, former owner of the estate upon which the stone was found, recognized the material after he had made a trip to Italy to inspect the product of the Tivoli quarries. Immediately he began advancing his newly found enterprise. The quarry on his property has been in operation periodically since 1880, but the product has been used only for its lime deposit. A local storage building was the first to be constructed with it. Shortly after its completion, however, Kerr died.

His estate was bought by Eastern capitalists who began marketing the stone on a nation-wide scale. Several of the leading buildings on both coasts, as well as through the Middle West, have been built with the Colorado product.

According to an official of the producing company, the deposit, composed of crystalized lime or marble coming from hot springs carrying lime solution, is sufficient to last 200 years.

Hot Springs Minerals Are Laid Down Rapidly

Yellowstone Park, Wyo.—The deposits of hot springs limestone, more properly known as "sinter," are laid down very rapidly, according to Margaret Lindsley of the Yellowstone ranger staff, who has been making a study of the phenomena in the park for the geophysical laboratory of the Carnegie institution of Washington.

She writes of one of her observations:

"A little wooden cylinder made expressly for measuring the rate of deposition was wired in place near the foot of Jupiter terrace. This point is easily 300 feet from the hot spring at the top and only about five feet above the main highway. The water in tumbling down over the terrace is well aerated and cooled to a little above body temperature. The block and the wire which held it in place were removed 21 days later, covered with a deposit of chalklike travertine to a thickness of from one-half to three-fourths of an inch.

"One might think that the water would lose most of its burden of mineral by the time it was at so great a distance from the point of emergence, but the experiment proves that such is not the case."

Marines on Guard Under Soviet Flag

Peking.—American marines in Peking are the only ones stationed in any important capital of the world to serve under the scarlet and gold banner of Soviet Russia.

Following the raid on the Russian legation last April by armed forces of Marshal Chang Tso-lin, North China's dictator, and subsequent departure of the Russian diplomatic staff and guards, the United States marines were chosen to police the Russian legation quarter.

Every morning a subordinate soviet official goes to a corner of the Russian quarter and raises the soviet flag. Shortly afterward an American marine walking his post, passes underneath the Russian emblem.

All sections of the legation quarter are guarded by the military police of the powers.

Brunettes Score First

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XIII.

CARE OF THE COWS: A farmer selling a grade dairy cow recently for $175 showed the buyer the record the cow had made through a Cow Testing Association of over 12,000 pounds of milk and over 400 pounds of butterfat. He said to the buyer, she will not make that record again out at a straw pile most of the day, or fed on Timothy hay and corn stalks.

The cow had been fed alfalfa hay, corn silage and ground oats and barley. She had a drinking cup beside her stall and salt and a little mineral every day. She was kept in a comfortable barn. She was turned out of doors every day while the barn was being cleaned and bedded if the weather was not too cold or stormy. She had sweet clover pasture in summer. Her great grandmother was a common cow but her three nearest sires were pure bred registered dairy sires.

The question may be seriously asked if a grade cow at $175 is a reasonable purchase. A 400-pounds butterfat cow, is, in the hands of a first-class dairyman; but as a rule a first-class dairyman will breed such cows instead of buying them. Success lies more surely in breeding than in buying. Mark this, that no farmer ever got anywhere in the building up a profitable dairy herd without using a pure bred registered sire of the same breed year after year.

Feeding Record

Herd of John O. Johnson, Holt, Minn.

Production on former feed, dated November 20th, 1927:

Production—88 quarts
Herd Test—4 per cent.
Price received for butterfat, 56c per lb.
Value of 100 lbs. of milk without figuring skimmilk, $2.24
Value of 1 quart of milk or 2 lbs., 4½c
88 qts @ 4½c per qt equals $3.96, daily income

Feed Cost
100 lbs. sugar feed @ $1.81¼ equals $1.81¼
$3.96, daily income, less $1.81¼, daily feed cost, equals $2.14¼, daily profits
$2.14¼, daily profit, X 30 equals $64.20, monthly profit on sugar feed

Statistics
Average production per cow, 17.6 lb
Number of cows, 10
Pounds of feed per cow per day, 10
Pounds of milk per lb of feed, 1.76

Production on Purina ration, dated January 12th, 1928

[Purina ration consisted of ⅓ Cow Chow @ $3.00 per cwt., ⅓ bran @ $1.70 per cwt., and ⅓ shorts @ $1.80 per cwt. The feed averages $2.16⅔ per cwt.]
Production, 112 qts @ 4½c or $5.04, daily income
Pounds feed per day, 64.3 @ $2.16⅔ per cwt equals $1.39, daily feed cost
$5.04, daily income, less $1.39, daily feed cost, equals $3.65, daily profit, X 30 equals $109.50, monthly profit on Purina ration

Statistics: Number of cows, 10
Average production per cow, 22.4 lb
Pounds milk per lb of feed, 3.06

The Clincher!

$109.50, monthly Purina profit, minus $64.20, sugar feed profit, equals $45.30, extra profit above feed cost by feeding Purina ration

"In addition to the increase of $45.30 extra profit above feed cost, my cows are in much better condition than they were when feeding sugar feed. The hay fed in both cases was exactly the same, and the figures above were taken only on the cows that were milking at the time I made the change from sugar feed to the Purina ration of ⅓ Cow Chow, ⅓ bran and ⅓ shorts.

Had Accident

While leaving town to home on Wednesday Mr. and Mrs. C. Rustad met with a bad accident when their team became frightened as they were passing over the railroad crossing near the way car of the freight train that had just pulled in. The team jumped out so far that the front bob of the sleigh missed the crossing, hitting the rails with such force that the evener broke.

In trying to hold the team Mr. Rustad was jerked out of the rig as was Mrs. Rustad. Both of them were bruised and shook up quite badly. They were at once rushed to a doctor at Thief River where they underwent a close examination, but no bones were found fractured.

WASHKOWSKY'S OLD SHOE

We call the attention of the American Bankers Association to the case of Mr. Washkowsky of Brooklyn. Mr. Washkowsky is hard working and thrifty, but like so many of us his education is defective; who is to blame for that we don't know. Mr. Washkowsky has been saving a part of his weekly wages for a long time, but hadn't told Mrs. Washkowsky where he was depositing his nest egg. That was a mistake, probably, but an inquiry into it belongs to another branch of education with which it is probable the bankers association cannot be held to have any concern.

But with Mr. Washkowsky's depository it has. He chose for that purpose an old shoe. He kept the shoe and its mate in his closet, and up to the other day had tucked away in one of them savings amounting to $350. On that same other day Mrs. Washkowsky, rummaging Mr. Washkowsky's closet like a good housewife, seeking what she could throw away or transfer to another place where Mr. Washkowsky couldn't find it, as is the habit of good housewives, found this same pair of old shoes. We suppose she said to herself, Mr. Washkowsky not being present to have it said to him, "Isn't that just like a man?" and acting thereupon just like a woman she sent the shoes to the cobbler to be repaired. It was either that or the ash barrel for them, and being frugal and Mr. Washkowsky paying the cobbler bills anyway, she sent them to the cobbler.

A distraught man was Mr. Washkowsky when he next went to make a deposit in his old shoe. "What new place," he asked in that martyr tone affected by husbands on similar occasions, "have you found for my old shoes?" Mrs. Washkowsky told him, expecting to be praised for her thoughtfulness. Women—but that's another branch of education.

Mr. Washkowsky went to the cobbler and found his shoes, but not the money, which we cannot but feel is not remarkable. We hope he will find it, but he hasn't yet, which again should cause no astonishment.

But what we would like to hear from the American Bankers Association is what steps it is taking to discourage people of magpie habits from keeping their money in stoves, shoes, mantle clocks, behind wall pictures, under floor boards and similar places. We have made no exact calculation, but from casual evidence we are inclined to believe there are enough funds hidden away in such places in this enlightened and progressive country to pay off the national debt. Not that we advise paying it off, because that would leave congress nothing to fuss with Mr. Mellon about; but if deposited in banks our banker might have some to lend when we need it, which he now never has: he says money is very scarce. We hold it is not; it is merely in Mr. Washkowsky's shoe.

Seeing that we have been pursuing education, or something called that, for several centuries, we cannot but feel this is a bad showing and that the bankers association is somehow responsible. It hasn't sufficiently impressed on the people that it has banks and what they are for. Mr. Washkowsky hasn't heard. And there are a lot of him in this country.—Kansas City Star.

What Statistics Show

There is no question in my opinion that prohibition is making America more productive. There can be no doubt of the economic benefits of prohibition, I think increased temperance over the land is responsible for a good share of the enormously increased efficiency in production which statistics gathered by the Department of Commerce show to have followed the passage of the dry law.

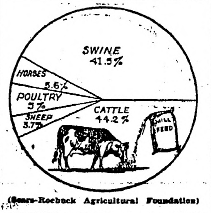
Cattle Eat Our Mill Feeds



(Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation)

Two-fifths of our enormous wheat crop is annually left on the farm to be fed to farm animals, according to the findings of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. In addition, 28% of the wheat that is shipped off or 17% of the total wheat crop comes back to the farm as mill feeds, where it is made into human food in the form of meat.

Mill feeds are a valuable and important feed item, especially in the dairy section. Cattle consume on an average 44.2% of all mill feeds. These are rich in protein and used in connection with corn and tankage make a balanced hog ration. Swine are the next greatest consumer of mill feeds; with 41.5%. Besides, 5.6% goes to horses, 5% to poultry and 3.7% to sheep.

Holt Lost Third Game To Strathcona Here Sunday

The Holt Hockey team met the Strathcona puck pushers in a hot contest here on Sunday afternoon. The locals seemed to be unable to get the puck lined up for the home goal, in spite of the fact that they played so hard that pieces of high priced skates went soaring thru the air. The locals lost the battle in a 6 to 3 score to the visitors, and Palmer lost the old skate which he had figured soon to put on the bench.

World Prays in Different Ways

Strange Customs Include Praying Wheel of Buddhists and Siam Rockets.

Washington.—"Occasional revision of the prayer books of Western churches is a reminder to the geographer of curious prayer customs that prevail in certain other parts of the world," according to a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"Central Asia and Tibet have been called the 'Land of Mechanical Prayers.' Wherever the natives congregate, there is a constant muttering 'Om Mani Padme Hum (O Jewel in the Lotus) while numerous contrivances bearing the same prayer are in use, supplementing the vocal petitions.

Wind and Water Power.

"The praying wheel has long been a favorite apparatus among Buddhists of these regions. In the villages and along the highways, the faithful carry the hand model of the wheel consisting of a revolving cylinder with a malletlike handle. As the holder walks or rides he spins the cylinder upon which the prayer is written hundreds of times. Each revolution of each prayer is an individual prayer. In this way thousands of prayers can be said in a minute.

"The larger wheels, some of which are six feet high and from ten to twelve feet in circumference, are placed under shelters along trails to sacred places, and in the temples. When a pilgrim passes the wheel he gives it a vigorous spin.

"There are lazy Buddhists as well as lazy members of other religious sects. Sometimes the owner of a plot of ground where there is a stream will set up a water-propelled prayer wheel. The pole to which the prayer wheel or cylinder is attached is stuck through a hole in a board which rests on the banks. Then a sort of mill wheel is attached to the bottom of the pole so that the water of the stream revolves the pole and cylinder, constantly grinding out prayers. Often the traveler sees a public wheel or two, bridging or beside a stream, which resembles, at first glance, a small rural grain mill of this country.

"In the land of the Nashi near the Tibetan border the natives, in bright red cloaks, journey to their sacred places, pounding drums and ringing bells. The difficult trails are lined here and there with prayer pyramids or piles of rocks of various heights.

"Prayer flags also play an important part in the religious life of the Nashi people. Nearly every village has a prayer flag pole which is seldom without a fluttering piece of cloth or hide. Each flag bears at least one prayer and each flutter is equivalent to a word-of-mouth petition of the villagers. The devout Buddhist often ties hundreds of these flags to a rope which he strings across an open space where the wind will strike them and shower merit upon him.

Moslems Use Prayer Brick.

"The Moslems are more conservative than their Buddhist neighbors. Prayer rugs, some of which are beautifully designed and colored, are important prayer accessories. Wherever the Moslem may be in the shop, or in the street, at prayer time he spreads out his carpet, removes his shoes and facing Mecca, goes through the formula of Moslem prayer postures. First he holds both hands before his face with palms upward, then bending at the hips he places his hands on his thighs. His next move is to kneel without moving his hands and from this kneeling posture he leans forward, touching the palms of his hands and his forehead to the ground.

"Some sects of the Moslems use prayer bricks as a part of their prayer paraphernalia. They are cakes of baked clay from Mecca, Medina or some other sacred place. They are placed so that the head of the praying Moslems will touch them instead of the ground. If he loses his prayer bricks, a piece of green paper or leaves of any plant that does not grow fruit will answer the purpose.

"The prayer rocket of the natives of northern Siam bears a crude resemblance to our 'Fourth of July' rocket. When the barrel is filled with powder, the rocket is placed upon a lofty platform and fired during religious rites. The natives are brave people, but they dread the spirits of their dead. The rocket is used to scare off the evil ones.

"When Kei islanders go off to war, the women of the tribe place baskets of stone and fruit on a board while they pray that the bullets of the enemies will rebound from their husbands and brothers as raindrops would rebound from their offerings if the latter were smeared with oil. Natives of the Celebes kill a rooster and a pig and, placing them side by side, pray 'O gods above and gods below, if you have pity on us and will that we eat, give us rain.' In Malay the rice growers must take a pint of rice to the mosque when prayers are to be said for the success of the rice crop.

"Some of the Nebraska Indians used prayer pipes. Instead of repeating the Indian prayer, the tribesmen sought a quiet place where they smoked their prayer pipes which accorded them equal merit to spoken words. Some tribes would put soft clay on their faces before seeking a place to pray."

Blind, Testifies He Can Judge Car's Speed

New Haven, Conn.—Although Henry Istas, totally blind student at the Yale law school, testified that his friend, George A. Lewis, a student at the graduate school, was driving at a moderate speed when his car was involved in a collision with another machine in Huntington street, Lewis was fined $25 on a charge of reckless driving.

Istas said despite his affliction he was able to gauge the approximate speed of an automobile by the sound of the engine and swaying of the machine.

Istas, who has won many honors in his academic work, further related that when Lewis went around the corner of Huntington street the swaying of the car was barely noticeable and the purr of the engine indicated a medium rate of speed. The court was noncommittal on Istas' testimony.

Millions Used Telling Country What to Buy

New York.—American industries are spending more than $30,000,000 a year to teach their buying public what to buy. As a matter of fact this business of education is an industry itself, employing about 5,000 persons and nationwide in its extent.

Education of the public is not the sole purpose of the 280 trade associations organized in this country, however. While it is important, the exchange of trade, technical and market information, collection of accounts, research work of every sort, standardization, preparation of accounting systems and other work is done for the various industries.

Financial support for the trade associations comes eventually from the educated buyer, of course, but directly it is obtained either through industry, such as 1 per cent of the total factory sales or through contributions.

The $30,000,000 expenditure does not include all advertising in newspapers and magazines, both for industries and for units thereof. It does, however, include a portion of the cost of placing publicity favorable to the interested industries.

Passengers Determine Time of Train by Vote

Berlin.—A vote of the passengers decided the service schedule of the night train on the Marburg-Frankenberg route.

After months of heated controversy between the federated railways and many of the local inhabitants, who, by word of mouth and in writing, had indignantly protested against "the untimely departure" of the last train out of Marburg, the federated railways hit upon the unique idea of unexpectedly putting the matter to a vote by the passengers on the train several minutes before it steamed out of the station.

Under the supervision of the train's personnel the passengers were asked to answer with "yes" or "no" if the present schedule should continue. The "noes" had it. Thereupon the railway company agreed to alter the time table and fix the departure of the night train from Marburg for a later time in conformity with the wishes of the majority of commuters.

WOMEN MOST ENTHUSIASTIC OF AIRPLANE PASSENGERS

They Like to Fly and Are Doing It by Hook or Crook, Says Commerce Department Official.

Washington.—Hundreds of American women took to the air in 1927 as airplane passengers. Thousands more will do the same in the present year, according to all signs.

As pilots women have recently held a spectacular place in the aviation spotlight. But their rapid and astounding increase in numbers and importance as passengers has gone by almost unnoticed.

Mrs. Evangeline Lindbergh, mother of the famous flying colonel, is perhaps the nation's most interesting and persistent woman air passenger. Her round trip by plane to Mexico, recently completed, adds scores of hours to her already long air record and there is every reason to believe she is by no means through flying.

Nor is she by herself. Her example is being followed by members of her sex manifold.

"Women simply like to fly and they are doing it by hook or crook," Donald E. Kephoe of the Department of Commerce said in explanation of this surprising situation. He ought to know, because he is an aviation expert and was in the commerce plane that escorted Colonel Lindbergh in the recent swing around the country.

"Women will do anything to get a ride," he said. "They will beg it, steal it, or pay for it, according to the circumstances. Half or more of the country's air passengers today are women.

"There were throngs of women at every field where we landed on the Lindbergh swing. Most of the people who begged us for a ride were women, many of them older women. It was noticeable that the older women who wanted to go up outnumbered the older men.

"Statistics show that a large percentage of passengers on the commercial lines, like the line between Detroit and Grand Rapids, are women. They patronized extensively the commercial line between Washington and Philadelphia during the Sesquicentennial exposition, and not infrequently do they ride in mail planes."

Then he told a secret. At the army fields, it seems, officers' wives are disgruntled because regulations limit their "planing" to one trip a year.

So, wherever they can manage it, they sneak a ride. There's such a thing as a plane's landing in a meadow somewhere to take on a passenger.

Pineapple to Furnish Future Paper Supply?

Caroa, a species of wild pineapple found in Brazil, may soon be used to provide pulp for making first-class paper.

For centuries the natives of Brazil have cut the long narrow leaves that protect the caroa fruit, and obtained fiber from them by beating the leaves between two stones. From this they make twine and ropes by "wet rotting."

In the experiments the pulp was obtained from this native rope, which was cut into short lengths, threshed, cooked in a solution of caustic soda, bleached, and beaten. The caroa fibers are cylindrical and comparatively long, but of small diameter, properties that enable them to mat together easily, giving compactness and strength to the shoot.

Gum, oil, balsam, pitch and acid, are also obtained from this pineapple.

The Overactor

Louis Marshall, the New York lawyer who represents the theater ticket agencies, was criticizing a young actor.

"This young fellow," he said, "overacts. I'd like to tell him the anecdote about Doctor Johnson. It would do him good.

"Doctor Johnson was finding fault one day with the acting of his friend, David Garrick, in the ghost scene of 'Hamlet.' He ridiculed Garrick's overacting, and when he finished Boswell said:

"'But that famous start! Wouldn't you, sir, start just as Mr. Garrick does, if you saw a ghost?'

"'I hope not,' said Johnson. 'If I did, I should frighten the ghost.'"

Cold in Vermont

Frederick Rasmussen, the well-known agriculturist, said at a banquet in Harrisburg:

"Agriculture is carried on in some regions of northern Europe where it is so cold that if you try to describe it people think you are exaggerating.

"Yes, they class you with the farmhand who said:

"'Cold? Yep, it's mighty cold today, but 'taint nothin' to what I seen to hum wunst in the Vermont highlands. Why, one day in hog-killin' time up thar it was so cold that we had a kittle o' bollin' water settin' on the stove, and when we took it out in the yard it frize so quick the ice was hot.'"—Springfield Union.

Cat Finds Only Bridge

How Bonzo, a black cat belonging to Bert Pierson of Hertz, England, found his way back home, is puzzling his owner. Pierson moved recently from Sheerness, on the Isle of Sheppey, to Hertz. The only means of access to the Isle of Sheppey is by way of the King's Ferry bridge. The cat found the crossing and traveled the 80 miles back to the old home, where he remained until found.

New Platinum Supply

The London colonial office announces that a platinum-bearing area of about forty square miles in extent has been discovered in Sierra Leone, West Africa, because the deposits, which are alluvial, are "likely to be of considerable importance."

Platinum is the most valuable of all metals. The present price is about $70 an ounce.

An interesting point in connection with the new discovery is that at present the world depends on Soviet Russia for more than half of its platinum supplies.

"Oh, I say! Stop and have sandwiches and coffee with me!" she suggested chummily—not at all as a subordinate addresses a superior officer. "I can't bear eating alone—it's almost gross, isn't it? Will you? I've heaps—we'll have a jolly lunch! I've a thermos bottle of hot coffee, good strong coffee that I made myself," she chattered as she began to set things out on the flat desk-top, feeling exhilarated at a bit of normal human association and talk after her weeks of strained, artificial relations. With this man, if they kept off of pedagogy, she could be herself—up to a certain point at least (though of course she would have to watch her accent). She almost snatched his hat and coat away from him as she directed him to draw up his chair before the array of dainty sandwiches, coffee and fruit which she had spread out.

"But," he said as he placed their chairs and they sat down, "why is my company all of a sudden so welcome? An hour ago it was, 'You here again!'"

"Well, since you know the very worst about me, I can enjoy a chat with you. I've been dying for a man to talk to! I've been almost driven to flirting with the wooden Indian in front of the village cigar store!"

"'Flirting'? I'm afraid I can't play up. Don't know how. Afraid I've always been rather a stick with girls," he said dolefully, his eyes on her glowing face and creamy neck encircled by a fluffy, fluted white ruffle. What a brute he had been to make her cry—anything so dainty and sweet!

"I wouldn't presume to flirt with the county superintendent," she reassured him, "who knows the very worst about me!"

"The very worst—you're sure?"

"What further do you suspect me of? Not knowing the Presidents in order? Well, I don't. Nor the Twelve Apostles either. And I can't name offhand the Chinese dynasties for the past five thousand years. Have some coffee?"

She poured him a second cup and his heart thrilled to her as he saw how gay she now looked after her tears. He himself was lonely enough, in all conscience, and this bit of companionship with such an engagingly impudent child was, to say the least, very diverting.

"You made this coffee?" he asked. "Teach that to the girls of your school and I'll advise your trustees to raise your salary—and if they taste your coffee they'll do it!"

"You put good coffee before learning and call yourself an educator! Men do like their comforts, don't they? I wonder why I'm teaching school anyway, when American cooks are paid such huge wages. What do American cooks do with the millions they earn? Buy country estates and retire?"

"American cooks?" he repeated reflectively. "How about foreign cooks? English cooks, for instance?"

She felt a betraying warmth in her cheeks. He suspected her! No wonder, the way she so often spoke of American things, as though she were not an American!

"I should think," she answered calmly, "that with the terrible unemployment we read of over there, cooks ought to be cheap. I'm told, Mr. Creighton," she changed the subject, as she leaned back in her chair with a sandwich in her hand, "that you're a terrible idealist. How do you manage it?"

"I don't. Though the alternative is so self-destructive! Do you (am I to conclude), like most young people of this day, imagine yourself a cynic?"

"How can one escape it?" I have a cousin who was a radical Socialist until he married a rich wife. I have an uncle who was a liberal in all his ideas until a fellow-professor at his college was expelled for his liberalism—when my uncle changed his views. Believe in liberals with ideals? No, it's asking too much!" She shook her head over it hopelessly.

"Did you never know anyone," Creighton asked, "to sacrifice something for the sake of his ideals?"

"You?" she inquired, looking at him over an expanse of sandwich at her lips.

"Heavens, no! I was thinking of—Mr. E. D. Morell, for instance—"

"Editor of Foreign Affairs," she nodded—then instantly regretted her too-ready knowledge of this English editor. Wasn't the mention of him a bait? Would an American be apt to know of him? "Of course," she hastened to add, "liberals all over the world must take heart from Mr. Morell's steadfast courage and heroism!"

"Yes—but—he isn't very much known in America—how did you come to know of him?"

"Read about him in The Nation."

He looked surprised. "I'm sure," he said, "you are the only teacher under my jurisdiction that has ever even heard of that paper!"

Conversation with him was, after all, too full of pitfalls, she decided. She was glad when the children's returning to the schoolroom obliged him to take his leave.

Her curiosity as to how much he suspected was fairly consuming her.

CHAPTER VI

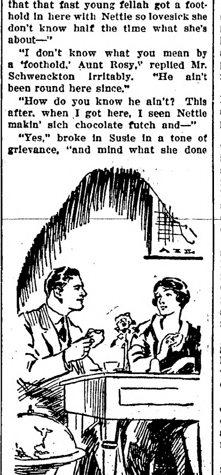
Aunt Rosy was again at the Schwenckton's, and it was manifest that her brother-in-law was not "overly pleased" at her unexpected visit. Conversation at supper, in spite of her efforts to sustain it, seemed to languish. No one but Aunt Rosy seemed to be in the mood for this friendly chatting.

"Susie tol' me about your holdin' up young Creighton and takin' his watch off of him, Sam," she said, "and if I was you I wouldn't like it so well that that fast young fellah got a foothold in here with Nettie so lovesick she don't know half the time what she's about—"

"I don't know what you mean by a 'foothold,' Aunt Rosy," replied Mr. Schwenckton irritably. "He ain't been round here since."

"How do you know he ain't? This after, when I got here, I seen Nettie makin' sich chocolate futch and—"

"Yes," broke in Susie in a tone of grievance, "and mind what she done yet! She cooked my fire out, so's I had to build it fresh to cook my supper!"



"'Flirting!' I'm Afraid I Can't Play Up. Don't Know How. Afraid I've Always Been Rather a Stick With Girls."

"And when her futch was done a'ready, did she offer some to me and Susie? She did not! And what's more, I don't see none of it bein' passed 'round to yous neither! What did she done with that there futch? Why, I seen her packin' it all up nice in a white box and hidin' it good away! Who for? That's what you'd better find out, Sam Schwencktoh! Who for?"

Nettie, her face crimson, muttered something about "a big nosey" and "buttin' into other folks' business"—but her father interfered.

"Be peaceful, both of you. I won't have no wranglin' at our meals. Till supper's through a'ready, Nettie can tell me who the futch is for."

Nettie, flashing a look of hate at Aunt Rosy, subsided into a sullen silence.

Aunt Rosy was certainly a very disturbing element in this household. It was because of her presence here this evening that Mr. Schwenckton found himself, greatly to his astonishment, not to say bewilderment and distress, "up against" the younger generation in a way that was a shocking revelation to him of how times had changed. Incredible it seemed to his patriarchal ideas of family life that his own young daughter should dare to defy him—but here was the fact before his very eyes—Nettie stubbornly refusing to answer his questions as to what she had done with the fudge she had made. She admitted that it was already disposed of. But neither commands, threats nor coaxings would elicit anything further from her.

* * * * * * *

Meely was pledged for a rendezvous, about school-closing time, with St. Croix in the woods on the hilltop.

This would be her first meeting with him since their wordless encounter in the Schwenckton kitchen the night of the "holdup" and Meely, as she hastened after school to the hill, was tingling with curiosity as to what he would have to say of that dangerous moment which they had managed to come through so unbetrayingly.

She was pretty sure that poor little Nettie's fudge had been made for St. Croix. "For all I know, he has been seeing her and has discovered that I am the teacher!" she speculated.

Not that she believed he had been seeking Nettie. He was, for the time, too engrossed in herself. But Nettie, in her adolescent infatuation, may have been thrusting herself upon him and St. Croix would not be overscrupulous in accepting gifts the gods offered.

"I'll find out about that fudge," Meely resolved, "and if he is taking advantage of that ignorant child, I'll protect her!"

She wondered, as she went on her way, whether St. Croix would notice the coat she wore. The season having advanced too far for her gaudy voile frock, without a wrap, she was in a bit of a predicament, for her jacket suit was far too stylish for the Meely of St. Croix' mental gallery and the only other wrap she had was this half worn-out coat she had used on the steamer en route for America, an English tweed that had once been such a first-class garment she feared St. Croix would instantly detect its quality and style—he was so observant and informed in such matters—well, rather!

If he did notice that her coat was a good English tweed and ask questions, how on earth should she explain? She would have to trust to the inspiration of the moment.

"It's almost unbelievable that I've come through so far without his discovering me! I'm—some—actress, I am! They'll certainly have to notice me when I get to Hollywood!"

He was there ahead of her at their meeting place and the nipping air of the hilltop had acted as an irritant to both his passion and his temper. It was getting much too cold for these out-of-doors meetings and he knew of no place under a roof where they could get together without risk of detection—especially as Meely's father had grown suspicious for some reason; he had brought old Schwenckton's funny letter with him to show her; as a warning that she must be more careful; he would demand an explanation from her as to what she had done to rouse her father's suspicion.

Was there no way that he could have the girl except by taking her away from her home altogether? But of course he wasn't going to get himself into that kind of a mess! Absurd to think of it!

St. Croix still felt confident that when he nodded his readiness, Meely would be only too glad and eager to come to him. Why he had put it off so long was a mystery to himself. Something about her all along had seemed to check his being precipitate—though probably she was just as impatient at his dallying as he himself was.

But the time was surely ripe now and he must delay no longer.

"I'm very displeased with you," he began as they sat huddled together to keep warm, on the big flat log. "What on earth made you do such a reckless thing, my dear, as to send that box of fudge to my home? My mother got hold of it! Don't ever do such a fool thing again, Meely! What on earth made you break out like that?"

"Ach, well—you see, you gimme them swell handkerchiefs and so I wanted to pay you back."

"Of course it was nice of you to make the candy for me—but to send it to my home! My mother asked all sorts of questions—she's awfully worried—"

"She must be awful stuck-up if you're so scared of her knowin' you travel with me! But I knowed folks a'ready that's got twicet as much as she's got and they ain't so proud that they're ashamed to know me!"

"My mother isn't 'proud,' Meely—she's the gentlest, sweetest, dearest—"

He spoke with such feeling that Meely, who so seldom saw him show feeling for anyone but himself, was impressed.

Embryo Lawyer Puts Up Successful Plea

Apparently lawyers are born and not made, if a delightful yarn published in the Manchester Guardian correctly illustrates the development of the legal mentality from a start in the cradle, writes the London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. There had been a certain liveliness in the nursery just before bedtime, with the result that some of the furniture was broken. There was a fog of highly conflicting evidence in the nursery, and father decided that, falling a full and accurate account of what had happened, an anticipated holiday at Scarborough should be canceled.

After some moments of deep thought his young son, who will probably some day be lord chancellor, summed up the position in a sentence: "I have said I didn't do it, but if I can't go to Scarborough unless I say I did do it, I think I had better say I did it; but, if I did do it, I don't know I did it." Father is reported to have retired from the discussion at this stage, without risking further discomfiture by cross-examination.

Dustin, the Resourceful

Harrison Gibbs tells of a night when the stage manager neglected to place a mattress outside the castle walls as a landing place for Dustin Farnum when he made a spectacular leap in some melodrama. Farnum landed with a thud audible all over the theater. To stave off the laugh he thought fast, with the result that almost immediately he peeked over the parapet and remarked, "The lake is frozen!"

Done Up in a Package

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

BOB MALCOLM came home from a discouraging day at the factory to find that a gay party of picnickers had eaten lunch down by his brook and had left remnants of their meal scattered about.

Now although Bob's place was for sale, he nevertheless retained considerable fondness for it—it had been his father's before him—and this wanton strewing of refuse made him see red.

He climbed out of his car. Something white caught his eye. A scrap of paper. Picking it up gingerly, he read the address on it.

"J. W. Knowlton,
"254 Madison Street, Bergen Manor."

Ah, ha! He was lucky. Not once in a hundred times would it happen that the marauders would leave an address behind them.

He selected the largest of the cartons on the ground in front of him and filled it with the debris. Then he drove on to the house, wrapped up the package and, in large, careful letters, prepared it for Mr. J. W. Knowlton.

With it he sent a letter:

"Dear Sir:

"I believe you had your lunch by the little brook on my property and left the things I am sending under separate cover.

"Yours truly,
"ROBERT MALCOLM."

Once dispatched, he promptly proceeded to forget all about it. Bob had had that on his mind which precluded any dwelling on an episode of only passing moment.

His business, the manufacturing of window and door frames, was on the brink of collapse. To bolster it up over a bad period he had resolved to sell the old homestead with its hundred acres and had put it in the hands of a realtor. But while many came to look at it, no one had offered him the price he felt it was worth.

Yet the little affair of the picnickers was not enough, as Bob had supposed it would be, when he sent after them their refuse. For a few days later, a letter reached him:

"Mr. Malcolm,

"Dear Sir:

"I am remailing the package you so kindly sent me, as I do not care to retain in my possession that which so obviously belongs to another. It is true that, on the advice of the real estate agent that it was exactly what I was looking for, I called to investigate your place. Not finding you at home I took the liberty of strolling about the property which, at that time, I was thinking of purchasing. I sat down beside the brook to do a little figuring and must have left behind some of my note paper. But kindly do not hold me responsible for the misdeeds of vandals who came after me.

"Very truly yours,
"J. W. KNOWLTON."

Why, oh, why had he been such a dumbbell as to give way to his anger resulting in antagonizing a prospective purchaser?

He crumpled the letter he had been reading and rose quickly. He would put his pride in his pocket, call on this J. W. Knowlton, and apologize.

As he drove through the traffic he could not but feel that hanging was too good for those picnickers who had caused all the trouble.

"Just a moment," a pretty young secretary bade him wait in the outer office until her employer should be at liberty.

Impatiently, he thumbed the sheets of the morning paper for ten—fifteen—twenty minutes. Then, as the inner door opened and a middle-aged couple came out, he rose and was waved within by a gesture from the pretty secretary.

"Mr. Robert Malcolm?"

Bob steadied himself. Was this J. W. Knowlton, who stood fingering his card? This slender, trimly dressed young woman with beautiful eyes and soft chestnut hair?

Everything was settled then and there for Bob. But, of course, Miss Jacqueline Knowlton did not know that she was being fallen in love with on the spot. Or, at least, she always claimed she didn't!

"I felt I must tell you that I regret my extreme stupidity," Bob began, a little awkwardly.

But the girl laughed. "Most natural thing in the world!" she said. "Only I couldn't let it go by. And I'm so glad of this opportunity to talk with you about your place. I love it. It's just what I have always wanted. You see, my business is landscape gardening and I need a place in the country for a nursery. Your price is satisfactory, also, Mr. Malcolm."

But a year later, when the window and door-frame business was once more alive and kicking, Bob got his place back again. That is to say he bought it from Jacqueline and deeded it to her as a wedding gift.

And, who knows, if those vandal picnickers had not caused Bob to go to Jacqueline personally, all the business might have been transacted through the agent? And how would their love affair have been put over?

"Only," said Jacqueline once when Bob said as much himself, "that doesn't mean that the moral is 'Be a vandal'!"

In the ordinary "brilliant" cut, a diamond has 58 facets.

HERE is a deal illustrating several points about finessing:

♠—J, 4, 3, 2
♥—A, K
♦—5, 4
♣—K, Q, 10, 4, 3

♠—8, 5
♥—Q, 9, 8, 7
♦—9, 8, 3
♣—J, 8, 6, 5

♠—K, 10, 9, 7, 6
♥—10, 6, 3
♦—K, J, 2
♣—A, 7

♠—A, Q
♥—J, 5, 4, 2
♣—9, 2

North deals and bids one club. East passes because his five-card spade suit might take only two tricks, and he has not sufficient compensation in outside quick tricks. South bids one no-trump, which is very proper after his partner's club bid; and all pass.

West leads the seven of hearts, dummy is spread and declarer stops to make a survey. He wants to finesse diamonds and spades towards West and clubs toward East and cannot plan the play in any further detail. The deal is played as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	H7	HK	H3	H2
2	D3	D4	D2	D10
3	C5	C3	CA	C9
4	H8	HA	H10	H4
5	D8	D5	DJ	DQ
6	D9	S2	DK	DA
7	S5	S3	C7	D7
8	S8	S4	S6	D6
9	C6	C10	S7	C2
10	C8	CK	S9	H5
11	CJ	CQ	H6	HJ
12	H9	C4	S10	SQ
13	HQ	SJ	SK	SA

Declarer makes a small slam.

In the diamonds, the double finesse is taken because declarer has less than nine cards in the suit in both hands, and of course when it wins, the lead must be thrown back to dummy and another low diamond led from there. In leading towards the King, Queen and ten of clubs, declarer is following the double finesse idea; and since he holds the nine, he leads that and passes it through. As East has to play the Ace, declarer knows that West has the Jack of clubs, and so is sure of the second finesse at trick nine.

At trick four East returns his partner's suit, as he is sure of taking out declarer's last high one—the Ace—and he hopes that West may get the lead later. Declarer's diamonds and clubs are now so thoroughly established that he easily takes all of the remaining tricks.

Entry Cards

This is a subject which many players need to study more carefully. Who has not bewailed the lack of an entry card? One often hears a player say, "Well, I have three perfectly good cards in dummy but I cannot get to them"—and the pity of it is that in the majority of such cases it might have been helped if the player had given entry cards more consideration.

Often one may play so as to make certain cards take tricks which would not ordinarily do so. When declarer has four cards of any suit in each hand it usually is possible to play them in such a manner as to make an extra entry card in dummy. Suppose that declarer holds Ace, Queen, ten and five, and that dummy has King, nine, eight and six. The ordinary way to play this suit would be to lead the five and win with the King which places the lead in dummy once and makes it impossible to get it there a second time in this suit. If, however, the ten is led and taken with the King, the six led back to the Ace and the Queen then played, it usually will draw the last of the adversaries' cards and declarer will have created a second entry card in dummy—the nine, to which he can lead the five.

Another situation where many beginners become confused and lose a trick or two, is where declarer holds all of the high cards of a suit in his two hands, but where his own hand holds only three with five in dummy, who has no re-entry card in any other suit. If he plays so as to take the third trick in his own hand, the two remaining cards in dummy are worthless because he cannot get to them; thus he loses two tricks. In such a case it should be easy to remember to play the high cards from the short hand first.

Lying About Height Common to All Men

Most men, consciously or otherwise, lie about their height. This was found to be true in a survey of the 24,669 men whose names appear in "Who's Who in America," the results of which are published in an article in Liberty.

"One of the first things discovered," the writer of the article points out, "was that men lie about their height, because the primitive nature of the male is that of a big, husky brute, and no amount of culture can educate out of a man the wish to appear likewise.

"The man who stands from 5 feet 10.5 inches to over 5 feet 11 inches is prone to announce himself as 'about six feet' and to endeavor to be just that. He will go to great lengths to achieve it—even, in extreme cases, to wearing high heels. Heights to 6 feet 2 inches are satisfactory, but beyond that a man will lie just as firmly to come down. Few exceptionally tall men stand erect, while the abnormally short men strut."

WESTERN GIRL STRENGTHENED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Manchester, So. Dakota.—"I was in a terribly weak and run-down condition when a friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began taking it and after a short time I felt better. We are a family of five and live on a 360-acre farm, so I have quite a good deal to do both indoors and out. At first I was unable to do anything and had to have a girl, but after taking the Vegetable Compound I finally gained my strength back and also gained considerable in weight. I will gladly answer letters from women in regard to your medicine."—Mrs. Otto J. Geyer, R. F. D. 1, Box 20, Manchester, So. Dakota.

Quart of Water Cleans Kidneys

Take a Little Salts if Your Back Hurts, or Bladder is Troubling You

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Eating too much rich food creates acids, which excite the kidneys. They become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood. Then we get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys, or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin drinking a quart of water each day, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys may act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush and stimulate the kidneys; also to help neutralize the acids in the system, so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby often avoiding serious kidney complications.

"FIVE CENTS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS."
"THAT'LL BUY AN ICE CREAM CONE!"

Mother's Cook Book

Not to deny that wrong and sorrow have been, are and will be, till time shall be no more, but admitting them, to try with our whole might to rise above them, to turn our faces to the East, and look for the rising sun, with patience and a steadfast hope, remembering that there is always a tomorrow.—Anon.

SERVING OF FOODS

YOU hear the housewife quite frequently remark that when she serves her family with good wholesome food it is quite sufficient, without wasting time on garnishes and frills, which do not add to the food value. Let us think a moment about that. Is not the food value enhanced by a happy arrangement of food? Does it not appeal to the eye and palate? The ordinary everyday food which we tire of so often served in the same way daily, with a little furbishing, makes an appeal to the taste.

The appearance of a table and the food upon it add wonderfully, not only in point of esthetic taste, but as to digestive results as well, for we digest and assimilate more readily the food which pleases us as to its looks.

An ordinary pastry bag or tube will do wonders in food decoration. A bit of whipped cream piped on a dessert or salad, or a birthday cake will make it something in a class by itself.

One who has never had a beautiful birthday cake, has missed much. With a pastry tube one may save some of the foundation frosting with which the cake has been covered, tint it and with the tube or bag, pipe a fluted rim around the cake or decorate with small pink roses. It is a very simple matter and takes but little practice to make quite beautiful things.

A good cream whip is one of the indispensables. If one has a large family and needs a large one, it is an economy to buy that kind. But there are small egg beater-sizes which will beat a half cupful of cream.

If one has a small family the individual casseroles are most convenient. A small dish of leftover food will be enjoyed and eaten from such a dish when it would otherwise be refused.

We should all be particularly careful of the little niceties of table etiquette, for with the young habits are formed which will make them agreeable companions or otherwise.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

ON GETTING UP EARLY

I ONCE roomed with a man who thought it was a virtue to get up early in the morning.

He did not get up early himself. But he thought he ought to.

Both of us had jobs that kept us at work late at night. The only opportunity for sleep we had was in the morning. I always made the most of that opportunity.

But my friend always felt guilty if he remained in bed after ten o'clock, no matter how late he had worked the night before.

He thought there was an intrinsic worth in getting out of bed at a certain hour.

Whether or not he utilized the time thus "saved" from his sleep to good advantage made no difference. On the rare occasions when he did leave his bed early he did not spend the extra hours in hard work.

As likely as not they would be frittered away in profitless inaction.

Getting up early, for instance, enables many people to acquire knowledge or culture that is useful to them. But the person who arises at the crack of dawn and then wastes his time gains nothing but loss of sleep.

* * * * * * *

Some persons make a point of arriving at their offices earlier than they are required to. Then they adopt a reproachful attitude toward the other workers who merely arrive on time.

But unless the early bird spends his extra time catching the worm, what possible advantage can he have over the birds who arrive later?

The fact is that these reproachful ones would really like to do the things they profess to frown upon. They would like to lie in bed late in the morning and play hookey from church occasionally.

* * * * * * *

They do not realize that merely arising before seven or being unwillingly present at Sunday worship constitutes no great virtue. Unless they get real benefit from these acts, as thousands do, why should they continue to perform them?

Unwilling rectitude is certainly hypocritical. But hypocrisy itself is regarded as a sin.

It must be conceded, however, that the reproachful ones have the bulge on many of us frank offenders. That holier-than-thou attitude which they usually acquire must give them a very gratifying sense of superiority to the rest of mankind.

BABY MISSING

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'VE looked upstairs, I've looked down,
Here and there all over town,
In the garden, in the yard—
My, but I've been looking hard.
Baby missing! Help me find
One of just one certain kind,
Just the one I used to know
Not so very long ago.

Why, it seems just yesterday
Baby used to laugh and play,
Do the things that babies do,
Creep and crawl and smile and coo.
But today I climbed the stair;
Just imagine who was there?
Not a baby, not at all,
But a lady, big and tall.

There she was in baby's room,
Still the same pink roses bloom
On the paper, still the sun
Through the window peeps at one.
But the baby's gone away;
There's a lady there today,
Quite a lady, yet her name
And the baby's seem the same.

Once we had a baby, now
Something's happened here, somehow,
Now we have a lady, yes,
But the nicest one, I guess.
Well, our baby's gone away,
But our lady's come to stay.
Baby's vanished, babies do—
But we love our daughter, too.

For Meditation

RADIO CENSORSHIP

IT IS an event of no small significance when thirty radio stations can all be hooked up together and one voice heard in every state and hamlet in this country. The science of broadcasting is only in its infancy and who dare predict what it shall be capable of accomplishing in the next ten or twenty years? With so great an accomplishment goes a tremendously important responsibility. Music is being broadcast to the satisfaction of all tastes as are also other forms of entertainment. But, when it comes to the human voice broadcasting a speech dealing with the fundamental principles of government, politics and issues of national and international concern, who determines just what voice shall be heard and who is responsible for the ideas and interpretations given?

Do we not need a centralized source of authority in such matters? We have a board of censorship in the picture film enterprise, why not in the advertising business of broadcasting?

The radio has come to stay. Its influence in the molding of public opinion, like the newspaper, is very great. Will that influence be for progress or retrogression?

SAWS

By Viola Brothers Shore

FOR THE GOOSE—

WASH and iron a rag and drape it around you tasty, and you got a costume. Let a costume get draggled around the bottom, and you got a rag.

You complain about other people's faults but your own is the on'y ones you can't get away from.

There's some proverb says it's better to be a rich man's slave than a poor man's wife. And one that claims it's better to be a poor man's wife than a rich man's slave. And both is right accordin' to whether you got the temper'ment of a wife or a slave.

FOR THE GANDER—

It's better never to pay a compliment to a woman than tell her she's got a hundred good points and then find one fault.

A woman that can't make you terribly miserable can't make you terribly happy neither.

A lotta times a man don't kiss a woman because he wants to as much as because he wants to know what she'll do if he does.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE DEER IN THE ZOO

BILLIE BROWNIE loved to go and see the creatures in the zoo. Nothing delighted him more.

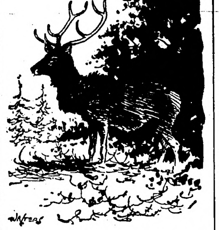
So the other day he planned to go and call on some of the members of the Deer family and others in their neighborhood.

First of all he called on the white-tailed deer. Mr. White-Tailed Deer was looking his best with his splendid big antlers looking particularly fine.

"We gentlemen," said Mr. White-Tailed Deer to Billie Brownie, "are the ones who have antlers, though the Miss and Mrs. Reindeer have antlers."

Mr. White-Tailed Deer was a magnificent-looking creature, and he told Billie Brownie something of himself, too, besides what he told him about the antlers.

"We live where there is thick underbrush and plenty of wooded country, and we manage to get through this kind of country even though we have such big antlers," he said.



"So Many Wonderful Creatures in Our Great Family."

"It is only we gentlemen white-tailed deer who act so cross at certain seasons, and then it is that we fight by putting our heads down before us and going straight at our enemies with our great antlers before us.

"We are brave, though, and we love life and we want to be here and we are going to see to it that we stay about. Yes, we are smart!

"We are one of the earliest known of all members of the deer family in this country. The early, early settlers knew of us and, of course, you know that the early settlers were the first arrivals among the people to settle here."

"Yes, I imagined that," smiled Billie Brownie, "but I'm always glad to be told, for I like to hear all the zoo news I can and I'd rather hear a thing twice than not to hear it at all."

"I'm not sure whether you'd speak of the early settlers as a bit of zoo news," said the White-Tailed Deer.

"Oh, I think so," said Billie Brownie, "for you were speaking of your family having been about at that time and that is White-Tailed Deer news, at any rate, and you are in the zoo here now."

"Well, glad it interested you," said Mr. White-Tailed Deer.

Then Billie Brownie went to call on the Axis Deer.

"You're the most beautiful of all," Billie Brownie said, as the Axis Deer smiled sweetly.

"It is a lovely compliment, Billie Brownie," the Axis Deer said, "and it delights my heart, yet there are so many wonderful creatures in our great family—oh, so much finer than I could ever hope to be.

"There are splendid elk and moose, great, majestic, handsome animals, so big and so magnificent!

"There are curious ones, too, as the Mule Deer from the Rocky mountains with his long ears. He is a big creature and much larger than I am."

"Oh," said Billie Brownie, "size isn't everything. I love your soft tan hair and your beautiful white spots, and I like it that though you come from a warmer place than you are now in you do not complain."

"Ah," said the Axis Deer, "but think how kind they are to me. They have built a house for me so that in the winter I can go inside my lovely warm house and not mind the cold.

"So I could not complain."

"True, they have done that for you, lovely Axis Deer. But at the same time you aren't of the complaining kind. If you were you'd complain and grumble about the weather even though you have a warm home.

"Creatures who complain do so anyway and it shows they have such cross dispositions. Yes, I'm an admirer of yours, lovely, graceful, sweet-natured Axis Deer."

And the Axis Deer looked at Billie Brownie out of his beautiful eyes and smiled that smile that only a deer can smile—just a little wee smile, but oh, so full of sweetness!

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE DUPLEX APARTMENT

SCIONS of wealth are giving up their homes, dismantling their mansions, discarding the dignity of the old "brown stone" in favor of the duplex apartment. One of the luxuries of our modern civilization, the duplex is regarded as the epitome of lavishness; yet it had its origin in a plan for economizing space!

In the Record and Guide of November 24, 1883, we find this reference to the first duplex apartment, newly built by a New York architect, Ernest Flagg, on the southwest corner of Fifth avenue and Twenty-eighth street:

"The duplex system, as it is termed, or some modification of it, is very desirable for economizing space. There is no need of the bedroom and kitchen being as high as the parlors, library, dining and other rooms. The edifice at the corner of Fifth avenue and Twenty-eighth street is full of instruction on this point."

The building, eleven stories high, is still standing, its twenty-seven duplex apartments bringing in high rentals. And although apartments are offered today as duplex simply because they consist of two floors with a private staircase leading from one to the other, they are not duplex in the ordinary sense of the plan which provided out of the same height as was allotted to the high-ceilinged front rooms, two floors of minor rooms in the rear of the apartment.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE DOG THAT BIT YOU

ONE of the most widespread and most firmly believed in superstitions in this country is that if you kill the dog that bit you, or have him killed, you will not have hydrophobia. As a matter of fact, hydrophobia is a specific germ disease; and if a person is bitten by a dog suffering from that disease, he is extremely likely to become inoculated, no matter what happens to the dog, and, unless he gets the Pasteur treatment in time, will die.

As a rule, now when a person is bitten by a dog suspected of having rabies, health officers insist that the dog be kept under observation for a certain length of time, instead of being killed at once, in order to see if the animal develops the suspected disease. Or, if some superstitious person has already killed the dog, the head is, if possible, at once secured and examined for a "positive" or "negative" result, in order that it may be ascertained if it is necessary for the bitten person to take the "treatment."

But so difficult is it to supplant ancient superstitions by modern science that, all over the country, dogs which have bitten persons are killed in the firm belief that danger of hydrophobia is thereby eliminated and no further regard is paid to the incident until, in some cases, the bitten person develops the dread disease and it is too late for help. In the vast majority of cases the dog probably did not have hydrophobia at all and the patient would have been safe anyway. In the other cases the patient dies a sacrifice to a superstition.

This superstition is merely an example of the old fallacy of our primitive ancestors, sympathetic magic. You kill the dog of which the disease is a part and you kill the disease. And, by sympathy, that part of the disease which has been transferred to the human being, this transference having been accomplished, according to the theory of our ancestors, by "the magic of contact."

Quite So

This is a true bridge story. She was only a beginner, but she meant to keep her end up, and so she was not at all abashed when her partner said, "Do you know you revoked?"

"Well," she replied, after a short but impressive pause, "what of it? I had my reasons."

Myrna Loy

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

YOUR IDEA OF GOD?

A GROUP of Chinese students studying in this country some time ago sent out a most unusual questionnaire. There are three questions included. "What is your idea of God?" "Do you believe in God?" and "Why?"

These questions were sent to hundreds of prominent men all over the country but the answers were not made public, although no man ought to be ashamed to let anyone know his opinions regarding three matters which are of so universal interest.

The question of "What is God?" has probably been asked more times since man first began to think than any other in all the category of our inquiries.

Robespierre wrote down a profound truth in the words "If God did not exist it would be necessary to invent one."

That which we do not know, we imagine. There is no man living, good or wicked, rich or poor, ignorant or educated who has not his own idea of God. And his idea may, and naturally would, be different from his neighbor's.

The Bible tells us that God is Spirit, Life, Truth, Love.

What is Spirit? What is Life? What is Truth?—Pilate asked this question and received no answer. What is Love? Can you give a satisfactory answer to these questions?

To the untutored mind nature reveals God. But nature is not and cannot be God since nature lacks the attributes of divinity.

The most convincing proof of the existence of God is not a proof at all.

It is the overwhelming craving of the human mind for a greater than itself, for a power, omnipotent, a mind, omniscient, a presence, all pervading.

No truly wise man denies God. Voltaire, who once denied Him, saw his unwisdom and built a church which he inscribed with a confession of his error.

Dependence is a part of the human make-up.

Reliance upon some one or something higher and mightier than ourselves is inborn and unavoidable.

We believe in a God, a supreme being, because we must believe.

What is your answer to the Chinese inquirers? What is your idea of God?

It is certain that you do believe. The reason why is plain. What kind of a God you believe in is largely of your own deciding.

It would be interesting to read the answers of the well-known men who replied to the questions of the Chinese students.

But more important to you than what their answers are is what yours is. It is truly something to think about.

HAUNTED BY GHOSTS OF MEN THEY SHOT

Faces Seen on Windows at County Courthouse.

Birmingham, Ala.—Seemingly from the world of spirits an unseen hand has impressed the pictures of two faces upon panes of glass in windows at the Pickens county courthouse at Carrollton, Ala.

Such men as Probate Judge B. G. Robinson, Sheriff Lester May, Rev. W. A. McCain, pastor of the Baptist church, and other well-known citizens of Carrollton, vouch for these pictures. They have been viewed by several hundred citizens of Pickens county. One face, they say, has been visible on one of the windows ever since the courthouse was built in 1876. Recently a second picture appeared on a new pane of glass inserted in an attic window by J. E. Oglesby, carpenter, to replace a pane broken by a storm.

The old face is said to resemble Sam Burhalter, a negro, who was killed many years ago while trying to evade arrest for burning the old Pickens county courthouse. This face is full of troubles and crossed with pain.

The new face resembles that of Lee Summerville, a negro who killed Deputy Sheriff Burt Johnson in November, 1926. He was shot to death recently by a Sumter county deputy sheriff, at York, Ala. The face may be seen a distance of two blocks.

Neither picture indicates whether the faces are white or black. They are purely studies of expression.

Soon after the second face appeared, the glass was removed from the window, washed with acid and replaced. At a close view of the two panes of glass nothing can be seen.

"These pictures are not an hallucination," said Judge Robinson. "Any one who cares to do so may see them at any time, just as many hundreds of people have seen them in the past." He says the images move from place to place on the glass when the sky is cloudy.

Largest Optical Glass Ever Cast Is Flawless

Washington.—An event of great interest to the scientific world occurred here when the largest piece of optical glass ever cast in the United States was uncovered at the bureau of standards and found to be flawless. The great disk, 70 inches in diameter, 11 inches thick and weighing 3,500 pounds was cast in May, 1927, and has been cooling for nine months.

The glass is destined for the Perkins observatory at Ohio Wesleyan university, Delaware, Ohio, for use as a concave mirror in a new reflecting telescope. An entirely new process, devised by A. N. Finn, a scientist, was used. Four unsuccessful attempts to cast the piece were previously made.

A thousand pounds of special broken glass, 4,600 pounds of sand and chemicals were poured into a single pot in a gas-fired furnace at the bureau on May 7. The molten mass was stirred by hand for six hours and run into a special electrically controlled mold at a temperature of 2,400 degrees Fahrenheit. Throughout months the temperature has been gradually lowered, over periods as slowly as 4½ degrees per day.

Dogs Leading Blind Make Rules at Berlin

Berlin.—Requests by the lead dogs for the blind are contained in a pamphlet published by the association of Berlin's blind:

"Do not pat us.

"Do not try to lure us away from our masters.

"Do not feed us. Our master supplies us with sufficient food and delicacies.

"If you want to help our master, do it on the other side, not on the side on which we are leading him.

"Facilitate our crossing a street during the hours of busy traffic by calling to us the moment the street is clear.

"Keep a watch on your own and other dogs lest they annoy us.

"Don't molest us by your inquisitiveness.

"If you have a complaint to make about us do it with the organization of which our master is a member; the local association of the blind."

Plowing for 110 Hours Called World Record

Tamarac, Minn.—Harold Anderson of Tamarac claims the record for continuous plowing. He remained at the throttle of his tractor for 110 hours without sleep, and left the machine only long enough to eat and fill the fuel tanks of the machine.

The youth left his home with the tractor and two bottom plows at seven o'clock on a Monday morning and plowed continuously until nine o'clock the following Friday night. Farmers in the neighborhood timed the operations.

In the 110 hours he plowed 60 acres with the tractor running at slightly under normal operating speed and covering a distance of about 240 miles. Anderson lost eight pounds during the five days.

U. S. CROOKS WORRY POLICE OF ENGLAND

Epidemic of Big Store Robberies Baffling.

London.—Scotland Yard's latest baffling problem concerns an epidemic of big store robberies. An American gang is suspected.

During recent months five of the leading establishments in the West end of London have been raided by expert cracksmen. It is estimated that $120,000 worth of jewelry and other goods have fallen into their hands.

Police officials believe it is the work of one gang and are inclined to lay it at the door of an American master mind by reason of the expert and modern methods employed.

Super-Criminals.

Another reason for their belief is the warning they received last year from police officials in the United States that a flock of American super-criminals were likely to invade Europe and that their pet hobby was expensive jewelry.

Scotland Yard's conviction became almost a certainty when a fashionable jewelry store in Bond street, the heart of aristocratic London, was raided recently and $50,000 worth of gems extracted from a supposedly burglar proof safe, despite the fact that the safe was in full view of the policemen patrolling the beat.

The most modern appliances were used. Acetylene blowpipes were first brought into play to prepare the safe for the steel cutters. Previously a hole had been made in the ceiling above to enable the thieves to lower themselves and their apparatus preparatory to operations.

Water was strewn on the floor to prevent an outbreak of fire from the heat of the blowpipes. The job was done in a few hours. The cracksmen made use of the electric light burning above the safe for illumination purposes. Not a clew was left. The policeman who occasionally glanced in to see if everything was in order was innocent of what was happening.

In three of the cases of big store robberies the thieves mingled with the customers during Saturday and then prior to the closing hour hid themselves in some convenient spot. They robbed the store at leisure during Sunday and escaped before business began Monday.

Acrobatics, eclipsing the feats of the renowned "cat" burglars, played a prominent part in the latest store robbery. Finding the floor on which they had hidden inclosed by locked doors and powerful steel shutters, the thieves knotted hose pipes and hung them down the parcels chute.

They then slid one by one down the dark spiral passage, ransacking floor by floor. For their escape to the street they utilized the same knotted hose pipes. Burglar alarms availed nothing.

Police officials declare these cracksmen set a new standard in burglary without noise or violence. They paid tribute to the manner in which the burglars swung themselves inside the building by means of the hose pipes.

Scotland Yard has put a large force of detectives to work on these cases.

Japan Will Protect Buyers of All Gems

Tokyo.—Dishonest pearl dealers and jewelers in Japan are to be put out of business if the government can accomplish it.

The department of commerce, at the request of legitimate dealers, intends to stamp all genuine jewels with the words "guaranteed by the government." Jewel inspectors will be attached to the department and every gem examined and attested will be properly stamped.

Numerous foreigners touring in Japan have been the victims of unscrupulous jewelers, paying exorbitant prices for imitation pearls. Probably no other people are as adept at "faking" gems as the Japanese.

The imitation gem dealers are located principally in Tokyo, Yokohama, Osaka and Kobe. Government inspection offices are to be located in each of these cities, beginning in April. Thereafter foreign buyers may assure themselves of some measure of protection by watching for the government stamp.

Long Lost Silver Vein Rediscovered in Mexico

Mexico City.—The famous mother lode silver vein two miles from Guanajuato City, in the state of Guanajuato, which was worked by the Indians before the coming of the Spaniards and for many years after the conquerors' arrival, has been rediscovered, according to Arthur Chippendale, geologist of the People's Mining company. The find was made by miners with diamond drills 2,000 feet under the surface.

Guanajuato is one of the most famous and largest mines in the world. Much has been written about it in fiction. Mining men say the strike probably will bring a boom to the section, as the discovery is one of the most important made in many years in Mexico.

Taking Out the Fun

London.—It's illegal for a vegetarian to force others, even his wife, to follow his example. Lord Chief Justice Hewart has so ruled at Old Bailey.

DEATH VALLEY SOON TO "PAY THE PIPER"

Scientists Seek to Harness Sun's Energy.

Stove Pipe Wells, Calif.—Death valley may be made to give up a far vaster treasure than ever has been dug from its blistering hills. It is about to be made to pay the piper.

H. W. Eichbaum, desert lover and believer in nature is making plans to entertain a group of scientists who will make some tests to ascertain the best methods of imprisoning the energy developed by the sun in Death valley.

An effort is being made by Eichbaum to bring to Stove Pipe Wells, here in the heart of the valley, Prof. Daniel F. Comstock, formerly of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, now a consulting engineer, who has developed ideas as regards to the controlling of solar energy.

The solar constant, says Eichbaum, corresponds to one horse power per square yard, or 3,000,000 horse power to the square mile. Here in Death valley it is believed there are greater opportunities for the testing out of this new process of developing power from the sun's rays than anywhere else in the world, save, perhaps, on the Sahara desert.

This Texan Was Busy for One 20-Year Period

Huntsville, Texas.—Thirteen murders, six marriages, enlistment in army and navy and a prison term for desertion were crowded into a twenty-year period by George J. Hassell. On the morning of February 10 the death penalty for which Hassell himself asked ended his strange career.

Hassell killed his sixth wife—the widow of his brother—and her nine children in 1926. After conviction Hassell told a life story that revealed three more killings.

Married at the age of eighteen, separated from his wife and infant son, Hassell joined the army, deserted to join the navy and then rejoined the army. After serving two years for desertion, he wandered for years and was married five times.

Hassell drew charts that revealed where he had buried the bodies of a woman and two children under a house in Whittier, Calif. It was after these killings that he married his brother's widow. The tenfold tragedy occurred at Farwell, Texas. Hassell never gave any reason for the slayings.

Discovery Reported of New Food Factor

London.—A discovery which it is claimed makes available a new food factor was announced here. Results of the study of vitamine D and vitamine A were made public in the annual report of the British medical research council.

Vitamine A, which was formerly confused with vitamine D, is stated to be quite distinct from it. Cod liver oil up till now had been regarded as the substance richest in this vitamine, but research has shown, the report says, that liver fats of cattle and sheep yield ten times as much of vitamine A as cod liver oil. It is contended that the discovery of this makes available a new food factor of immense value, and also that these fats are entirely free from the unpleasant flavor of fish oils.

Vitamine D, a mysterious and vital factor essential to health, and until lately obtained only as a product of living substance, is now stated to be producible by the action of ultra-violet rays upon a chemical substance called sterol.

Young Turkey Wearing America's Old Clothes

Washington.—Due to the young Turk movement for the wearing of Western styles of clothing, about 2,500 bales of old clothing are being imported annually into Turkey, the Department of Commerce reports. The value of the annual imports of old clothes is fixed at $150,000.

Going Too Far

Des Moines, Iowa.—A husband moved to wrath by a wife's bob may not chastise her. The state Supreme court so held in confirming a divorce granted to Mrs. Nona Harden O'Brien.

Inherited

New York.—Joan Taylor, thirteen months old, plays real tunes on the piano, whistles and sings. Her dad is Deems Taylor, composer and critic.

Metal Makes Suits Last for Lifetime

London.—Gloom held forth in the London tailor shops recently despite the fact that the day was the sunniest of the year. The bad outlook was caused by the announcement that "metalized" suits, that won't wear out, were possibilities of the future.

Demonstrations of the new metalization process were given by W. I. Einstein, said to be related to Professor Einstein, of relativity fame. They were attended by many scientists, who saw suitings and other materials treated, which, it was claimed, would last a lifetime.

Angry, She Goes to Bed and Remains 40 Years

Montgomery, Mo.—Declaring 40 years ago, in a fit of anger at her husband that she would go to bed and remain there until death, Mrs. Mary Bobbst has fulfilled her threat. She died here at the age of ninety-two. Her husband has been dead many years.

BARTER CHILDREN FOR FOOD MORSEL

Famine Victims in China Are Pressed to Desperation.

Peking.—A perishing people, hundreds of thousands of them wandering aimlessly about the countryside seeking roots, bark, chaff and food, with their homes torn down so that the wood may be sold in order to secure money to purchase grain—this is the picture of famine conditions in a portion of Shantung province near Tsinan, the capital, which the China International famine relief commission sends to Peking.

Three years of bad crops, merciless taxation, civil war, exploitation by bandits and uncontrolled armies, a locust pest and no rain—these are the factors which have reduced more than 4,000,000 people in 70 counties to beggary.

Even the well-to-do are poor today, for they cannot find buyers for their lands. So great is the glut of land thrown upon the market by the starving peasantry that farms which formerly sold for $200 (Mex.) an acre are now selling at $2 per mow, about $10 (Mex.) an acre, or only $4.50 in American money.

But it is not only land that is being sold for a song. Young girls are being sold into concubinage, and worse, the price running from $4 to $25, according to the youth and comeliness of the girl in question. Parents with boy children are selling their male offspring to couples less lucky. Girl children, too young for work or vice, are often being killed by their parents.

In Tsinan 25,000 famine district refugees are living and sleeping in the streets, enduring the bitter cold of midwinter, and existing on only one bowl of free gruel a day distributed by the four charity kitchens maintained there.

Twenty-two of these 70 counties which are experiencing famine conditions are reported to be now entirely deserted by human beings.

"There is to be seen neither man nor smoke," is the way the official report phrases its description.

Dog Digs Up Plunder of Police Murderer

Los Angeles.—What police failed to do in three years a small fox terrier accomplished within a few minutes recently.

Clawing a hole in which to hide a bone the dog dug up travelers' checks, several hundred dollars' worth of jewelry, an automatic pistol, and half of a 5-gallon can of pistol shells in a garage at the rear of the home of Mrs. Elsie Zubries.

The discovered valuables, according to police records, comprise a quantity of loot which was cached by Philip Sloper, who was hanged at Folsom June 25, 1925, for the murder of a police officer in San Francisco. Sloper lived at one time, police stated, at the home of Mrs. Zubries.

The checks, according to police records, were taken in the robbery of the Multnomah Commercial National bank at Multnomah, Ore., November 6, 1924. A quantity of the jewelry found was identified by detectives as having been obtained in the burglary of the home of Mrs. J. E. Schlessinger of this city, October 24, 1924.

Girl Hears Hubby Phone Other Girls, Gets Divorce

San Francisco.—Rules are rules, so Margaret C. McCarthy, sitting at the switchboard in the telephone exchange, would connect her husband with the other girls he called, just as she would for any other subscriber, she told Judge Sproul at the trial of her suit for divorce from James J. McCarthy.

But then some rules, maybe, are not so important, and Mrs. McCarthy admitted she "listened in," which she does not do for every subscriber.

"I'd see the light from our house flash on the board, and there would be my husband, calling up some other girl," she testified. "I had to connect him, of course, but I just could not help listening in. No wife could."

Judge Sproul conceded that it probably would be too much to expect of any wife that she would not "listen in" under the circumstances. He gave Mrs. McCarthy a divorce.

Bar Stunt Flying

Paris.—Dare-devil flying and other kinds of aeronautical flirting with death must go. Such is the dictum of the International League of Aviators, in which 20 nations, including the United States, are represented.

Saved the Train

Swedesboro, N. J.—Richard Overly, colored, thirteen, grabbed an old red tablecloth when he learned of a broken rail, tied it to a stick and waved an oncoming train to a stop.

Proving That Truth Has Fiction Beaten

Amy Lowell was, as all the world knows, devoted to Keats. She believed herself spiritually attuned to him.

"I shall never forget the last time I visited at her home near Boston," says Dr. S. W. W. Rosenbach in "Books and Bidders." "After a delightful dinner we went into her library, where we lighted our cigars and talked.

"Suddenly she leaned toward me and, with an excited brightness in her eyes, said:

"'Doctor, there is a certain book I want more than anything else in the world! Keats' own copy of Shakespeare, with his notes through it.'

"I put my hand in my pocket and smiled. By one of those unusual chances which really do make truth stranger than fiction I had that very volume in my pocket. She caught her breath and grew pale with joy as I handed it to her."

Blunt American Praised

Americans are blunt, outspoken and brusque, almost boisterous in their manners, but bubbling with an unequaled heartiness and warmth in their contacts with strangers and each other, and thus hold the key to better relations between men and nations, is the opinion of Yasuki Hasewaga, who was sent to this country a year ago by the Tokyo English Teachers' association of Japan. Hasewaga's trip was to promote international friendship, and he visited in 60 American homes and addressed 200 public meetings in the United States. "Americans seem frivolous and entirely lacking in dignity to many persons, and especially to the Japanese," he said on his return to Tokyo, "but they are not. They are simply natural, frank and friendly."

Married in Auto

Ben Emerson of Ripley, Tenn., and Miss Media Mitchell of Memphis, Tenn., drove downtown in the latter city to be married, but a parking place was out of the question. Circling a block, they summoned Squire Coleman on the run and with the squire on the running board the next trip around the nuptial tangle was completed. They dropped the squire at his office and the groom stepped on the gas and a honeymoon was on.

Unkind Assumption

A young West Virginia matron has been acquitted of assault with a deadly weapon after attacking her husband with a rolling pin. The jury presumably reached the conclusion that a rolling pin is deadly in the hands of a young wife only when she is making biscuits.—Detroit News.

Nothing Serious

"Have you seriously considered this step?"

This was overheard from the parlor.

"Ah, he is proposing matrimony," commented pa.

"Just dance talk," said mother.

"Cold" Rays Pierce Fog

The rare gases employed in electrically charged tubes for illumination emit the only rays known to science that will pierce fog. The light itself is "cold" and produces no heat.

Felt Obligated

"Why did you quit that butter-and-egg man?"

"I got tired of ordering omelets."

Making money is just a game. Men are not deeply interested in the money, but they like to win.

To keep thin, starve. The first hundred years are the hardest.

Realization without hope loses half its charm.

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of plain Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic; constipation; diarrhea; or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: it is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

SATIN, LACE, ORANGE BLOSSOMS

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"STOP it, James. I kissed you once for howdedo. What's got into you?" Prudence backed away in alarm, smoothing her hair to its usual ash-blond sanctity.

Her lover swung up and down the best parlor savagely, rumpling his own black locks to ease his feelings. "Plumb tired of this tarnation waitin'—that's what's got into me. Ten years we've been keepin' company an' no nearer a weddin'—till the whole town's wonderin' why you won't take me or leave me!"

"Now, Jamie," she set her blue eyes to their most beguiling upward angle, "you know I been gettin' ready all that time. Paw ain't had a cent to spare from the farmin' and the only thing maw taught me before she died was to make nice seams an' hems—so that's all I could get any money for. Just plain sewin'—an' I saved every penny to buy my weddin' things. The hope chest has a dozen of pretty near everything now." She smoothed her blue gingham with a satisfied pat.

"Ten years to git ready, an' you ain't ready yet!" James threw himself down on the horsehair sofa and glared at the wax flowers under the glass on the marble-top table.

"All but my weddin' dress," Prudence blushed hotly and sidled over to the sofa. She slid down at the other end and tried to mollify him with her dimple smile.

"What do I care what you're married in? I want you." He moved across the slippery surface and made safe anchor by casting an arm about her slender shoulders. "Girl, girl, you don't know"—his voice turned husky and broke.

"There, there," she soothed, laying a cool hand on his cheek and drawing his head against hers. "I have to care. Maw was a lady born an' she'd turn over in her grave if I wasn't married right. White satin an' lace," she murmured dreamily, ecstatic visioning closing her eyes.

"I'll buy it for you—though what in thunder you'd do with it in Maysville I can't imagine. Why not get you somethin' serviceable, say a nice broadcloth you could use all winter?" He pressed his advantage of position by tightening the embrace.

"Oh, no. A lady can't let her beau do anything like that. An' I can earn it all right in another two years." She noticed his encroachment and disengaged herself gently, arose and went to the window to shift the shade half an inch and straighten the scrim curtains.

"Not two years, nor two months, nor two weeks!" James got up and strode to her, whirled her around and actually shook her until one lock fell down across her astonished face. "Just two hours you get, while I drive to town for a license. When I come back you be standin' on the stoop ready to go to the preacher's—or else you—"

"Jamie! What are you a-sayin'—nobody sane gets married like that!" She began to tremble at his unsaid alternative.

"Then I'm crazy. Crazy mad, that's what. I've stood for all the gettin' ready that I'm a-goin' to!" He shot a gaze of golden fire from his hazel eyes straight into her own, which wavered slightly, avoided his stabbing intentness and wandered helplessly up and down the wallpaper's pink roses.

"Look a-here!" he commanded, setting his strong hands either side of her face and dominating her by sheer force. "Maybe there's some reason for you to put me off this-a-way. Happen you don't love me enough to go any further—be a wife—"

"Jamie, you know I'm devoted to you—there's never been—"

"What if there was some other fellow? I'm that simple, I wonder now—"

"Of all things! I can't believe my ears."

"Then don't give me any more of this waitin' talk. I'm ready right now. I laid off a day's plowin' to 'tend to this. Redded myself all up in my best. Now there's goin' to be a weddin' or I'm due for a long trip somewhere. I don't care if I never come back." He whirled on his heel and started for the door.

The girl nimbly intercepted him. "No, Jamie, don't act that way. It isn't natural. Tell me what started you off today." She clung to his big arm with both little hands.

"Well, if you must know, that ornery Hiram Slocum. He's just hired a town house from his uncle an' came ridin' by on a high-steppin' horse, hailed me an' when I'd plowed to the fence he sung out—doggone him—" James balled his big fists.

Why is Hiram back? Haven't heard of him in five years."

"Sure you ain't?" tartly. "Anyway, he up an' 'lowed he wanted to beau you to the ice cream festival tomorrow night—seein's we wan't hooked up yet—likely not goin' to be."

"And what did you say?" breathlessly.

"I promised him if he did, that would be his last ice cream. He rid off laughin'. So I just unhitched right there, put the team in the barn, changed—and here I am. What say? Be ready?"

A gush of affection surged over her. Her heart started throbbing loudly. She could not let him go. She would rather be married in her old white organdie—a thousand times rather. "Y-yes," she faltered.

He gave her a bear hug and rushed away. She heard him running down the shell walk, and then the clickety-clack of his trotting team.

Her cheeks burned. She trembled so she could scarcely mount the stairs. But once in her little blue and white bedroom she felt stronger, more herself. The neat, pretty room smiled at her encouragingly. She took off her work dress and hung it in the closet. She laid out the last summer's best dress and its accompanying lingerie, white hose and slippers. White anyway—she was thankful for that. She bathed, and in her kimono was putting the final touches to her hair, when heavy feet clumped up the stairs, and her father's voice called.

"Prudence! Whar be ye." A queer sound followed, as of tools falling, the thump of a hammer, the whang of a saw.

"Here, paw!" she swung open the door. "What on earth—"

"Just took a notion I'd build a flight of steps to the loft—ain't been up thar sence the fire burned the old ones thirty years ago—bout the time you was born. I got the risers all sawed ready. Come an' help me brace 'em."

"Paw, I can't just now. I'm dressin' to—"

"Do what I say. Ain't you been at me this long time to fix this so you could go up an' clean out the old truck up thar?" His whiskers wagged belligerently and his blue eyes flashed.

She humored him. Plenty of time. It would help the two hours to pass. The risers went up in jiffy style, the treads were nailed in place and with a flourish he handed her up.

The attic was cobwebbed and dusty. Discarded furniture banked in the corners. Bags of rags and old shoes hung from the ceiling. Under the one window, in a glare of sunlight stood a handsome leather-covered trunk.

"Your maw's things," the old voice shook. "I couldn't a-bear to see 'em after she—went 'cross Jordan."

Prudence ran eagerly to open it. The dusty catch resisted, but finally gave to her tugging. The lid opened with a sigh, and there on the top lay a shimmering ivory satin gown and a veil of old lace. There were artificial orange blossoms in a dainty wreath. "Her wedding dress!" gasped the girl.

"We had a crowd, an' bridesmaids. She was raised that-a-way, an' these things was her maw's afore her. I reckon some day you—" his eyes filled with tears.

"Today, paw!" she cried. "Jamie's gone for the license. Go get into your boiled shirt an' take me to the preacher's. Glory! I'll be married right after all, in white satin an' lace an' orange blossoms!" She gathered the lovely bridal symbols to her bosom and dashed down the new stairs to her room.

Her father, dazed, hustled after her, into his den, from which she heard sounds of a mighty struggle.

They met on the landing and went down to the porch as if to organ music. The sound of very fast trotting horses grew louder, louder and stopped the other side the hollyhock hedge.

"You look just like your maw, Prudie, beautiful, beauti—"

"Ready?" sang out James, leaping the gate.

She simply floated to meet him.

Unlettered Man Given High Editorial Honor

"Nothing may happen to Europe worthy of the curiosity of men of letters which cannot be learned of in this journal." With such bold flourishing was announced in 1665 the first learned periodical, Journal des Savants.

Men of arts and sciences soon found that the promise was kept, some of them thought, too well. For it developed that Denis de Sallo, counselor of the parliament of Paris, who had taken up publishing as an avocation, had hired one "M. De Hedouville to take the task of adjusting the material which shall come from different hands, so that it shall have some proportion and regularity." No one knew who this mysterious M. De Hedouville could be, but it was agreed that he often used articles that were entirely too tart and stinging to please the highest authorities of those times.

Finally an investigation conducted from Rome revealed that M. De Hedouville was in reality a man quite innocent of wrong intention, and learning, as well. He was none other that Publisher Sallo's butler, whose name had been borrowed that Sallo might enjoy a liberty of expression. A censor was installed and the periodical was permitted to continue, and although it has since been suppressed for a brief time, it is being published today.—Kansas City Star.

Wonderful Vine

Grape vines are known to live a great many years and bear almost yearly crops of good fruit. One of the oldest grape vines in this country which grows on Roanoke Island, North Carolina, is claimed to be more than 300 years old. Its yield is still very abundant and the vine appears to be in good health. Historians declare that it was planted by members of Sir Walter Raleigh's party, who sailed from England for the coast of the New world in the year 1584. Many persons have secured cuttings from this plant, but few will grow.

Horns in Odd Place Handicap to Rooster

Now the rooster has joined the list of horned animals. At least one rooster has, for on an Arkansas alligator farm in Hot Springs is a large white rooster with two horns sticking out from his head, one on each side. The horns, which are of bone and two or three inches long, give the rooster a most uncanny appearance.

This freak bird, unlike his brothers, has practically no spurs to use in his fights. Nature, after giving him these horns, apparently decided that spurs were useless, and they seem to be, for it is said that one look at his horns is enough to set the other roosters going in the opposite direction.

With the pullets it is a different matter. They evidently prefer spurs. So the horned rooster has his troubles. The roosters won't fight him, and the pullets ignore him. All he can do is to crow his sad tale of being different to the world at large.—Kansas City Star.

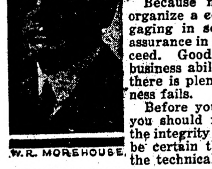
THE "GET-RICH-QUICK EXPRESS"

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association



W. R. MOREHOUSE.

So many millions of people have been defrauded out of their savings that it is the most natural thing for them to assume that the failure of any company in which they have stock is due to dishonest manipulations within the company.

The facts are that many companies go on the rocks financially due to mismanagement and poor judgment and without any intent on the part of those in charge to defraud the stockholders.

Because men of good moral character organize a company for the purpose of engaging in some business enterprise is no assurance in itself that the business will succeed. Good intentions are one thing and business ability another, and usually unless there is plenty of business ability the business fails.

Before you invest in any new enterprise you should not only satisfy yourself as to the integrity of the managers but you should be certain that they have the experience, the technical knowledge and the ability to make the business a success.

What I am seeking to emphasize is the importance of making a thorough investigation before you draw your savings from the bank and entrust them in the hands of persons who may lose them, not through dishonesty but through poor business judgment.

Too many inexperienced investors rely on hearsay and on information too general to be at all adequate, when it comes to parting with their cash. So I say, make it a rule always to go to the bottom of every investment, and as it costs nothing to consult your banker, or the local Better Business Bureau, or the National Better Business Bureau, New York City, leave no stone unturned in order that you get the facts.

If you find that the organizers are trying to avoid an investigation, take that as a tip for making a most searching investigation.

In making investments a hasty investigation, or a superficial investigation is a most dangerous thing. To get the facts about an investment you usually have to dig deep and wide, and no rush investigation permits you to do this. Promoters of the worst type often welcome a hasty investigation, knowing that it does not give the investor sufficient time to get below the beautifully camouflaged surface finish with which they have so adroitly clothed their fake stock.

The road to happiness and contentment lies along the route to safe investment, the road made safe by the slogan, "Investigate Before You Invest." At no point does this safe road run parallel, cross or form a junction with the route carrying the "Get-rich-quick Express." And although the safe route is devoid of thrills and the excitement peculiar to the other route, it is also devoid of its worries, heartaches and disappointments.

Although the safe investment route makes no rash promises of "independence for life," or "a million a minute," and although it does not use the slogan, "Ride along with us to Fortune and Live in Ease and Comfort in your Old Age," it actually brings comfort, independence and happiness to those who travel it, while the other route leads to despair, drudgery and poverty.

According to a certain survey of investments sold to the public by irresponsible promoters 97 per cent proved to be a total loss, notwithstanding they were sold with the assurance that they would bring financial independence for life.

Of new promotions sold to the public in a certain city more than 50 per cent were doomed to failure from the beginning for they were waterlogged with too much free promotion stock given to the organizers. It is said of most oil promotions 85 per cent are doomed to failure before a share of stock is actually sold.

So I repeat, you cannot afford to take the "Get-rich-quick Express," for she's headed for the ditch.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XIV.

BREEDING UP A DAIRY HERD: Most of the profitable dairy herds in the State were bred up from common cows. A heifer from a common cow and a pure bred dairy sire is called a "half-blood." Her daughter from another pure-bred dairy sire of the dairy breed is called a "three-fourths." The next generation "seven-eighths" and the next "fifteen-sixteenths" or a high grade.

All dairy authorities agree that high-grade dairy cows may be just as productive as pure breds. Thus, in four or five generations of pure bred dairy sires or within a period of from 8 to 10 years a farmer can build up a dairy herd equal to pure-breds without buying a single cow. To buy good, purebred dairy sires is the all important thing When a good grade herd has been built up, then is the time to buy a few pure bred cows or heifers.

There is decided satisfaction as well as profit in breeding up a good dairy herd. To be a breeder of profitable dairy cattle or of any kind of profitable livestock is a distinction to be desired.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XV.

DAIRY BREED CHARACTERISTICS: Holstein cows are noted for their large size and large quantity of milk produced. The average weight of Holstein cows is between 1200 and 1300 pounds. Their average milk production is between 8000 and 9000 pounds a year. Their average test is about 3.5. Guernseys have an average weight of 1000 pound, produce between 6000 and 7000 lb of milk with an average test of about 5 per cent. Jerseys average about 200 pound lighter than Guernseys in weight average a little less milk but with a little higher per cent butterfat. The Jersey gives the richest of all milk, the Guernseys the most highly colored milk. Where there are many Guernsey cows the creamery need not use butter color in the cream. Holsteins give the most milk. Ayrshire cows are about the same size as Guernseys and give about the same quantity of milk but with an average test of about 4 per cent. They are noted for being hardy and good hustlers for their feed where pasture is such that the cows must travel far. They are most popular in the Southwest. The Brown Swiss are a large breed, as large as the Holsteins. They produce about the same amount of milk and with about the same per cent of butterfat as the Ayrshires. They are also a rugged breed.

Milking Shorthorns and Red Polls are classified as dual purpose breeds and are kept for dairying to some extent. They have some good dairy producers among them. Common cows of no particular breeding are kept for dairying altogether too much. They are kept because they are at hand and because their production is not studied from the standpoint of the greatest profit. The production of common cows may be estimated at 100 lb less butterfat a year than dairy bred cows.

THE HOLT SCHOOL RECORD

Published by the Seventh and Eighth Grades

WE all have been at a stage in life which marked the starting place for success or failure. That stage is while we are still young. Every boy or girl, man or woman, should be ambitious in order to gain success in life. When you are thru with school and enter into the world, see what you can do to make this a better country to live in. Do not start out before you are sure what your work is. If you try once and fail, try again. This is where ambition comes in. Be careful that you do not take the wrong road in the world. There is a low as well as a high ambition. Aim for the highest purpose.

Emerson said: "Hitch your wagon to a star." That means that you can never aim too high.

The third and fourth grades have been busy making embroidery work at school for the purpose of obtaining money thru the sale of the work to buy new pictures. They must have been successful, for two new pictures, "The Song of Spring" and "The Age of Innocence" can be seen on the walls.

The sixth grade pupils are working on a play in honor of the man who brot the attention of Europe to a new world—Columbus. They are planning to have three acts.

Free-hand drawing is the rule in the seventh and eighth grades. All rulers and patterns are being discarded for the present.

In order to remember the exploration work on the Great Lakes and Mississippi the fifth grade pupils are making a moving picture showing scenes along the way.

With March comes unsettled weather and winds. The Dutch with their windmills always help to remind one of winds so the fifth and sixth grades have painted some Dutch scenes.

The seventh grade reading class has finished one of Hawthorne's tales, "The Pine-Tree Shilling." This brot up many interesting remarks on ancient and modern forms of money. The pupils are beginning to realize that there is a great deal of history hiding behind a silver dollar.

The Modern History class recently finished an interesting study of the Industrial Revolution and the development of the factory system. The class examined samples of raw materials such as cotton and wool. Cotton bolls were obtained from factories in South Carolina and threads were made from them. Woolen yarn was also made from raw wool brot to class by certain members. The difference between homespun and factory made material was noted.

The English III class has practically completed the study of American Literature.

Says Too Many Girls Are Slovens at Home

Many women of today have a "peasant walk"—the heavy tread of one who tramps in stiff shoes on rough roads—Temple Bailey, popular novelist, told Hildegarde Fillmore in an interview for McCall's.

"Perhaps there is no place where a girl's beauty means so much as in her home," says Miss Bailey. "As she grows up from childhood to young womanhood she feels that she must be attractive, that she must impress the world with her personality. And she should be encouraged to make herself charming, not by artificial means alone but by learning all the arts which may enhance her natural loveliness. Too often, I'm afraid, she thinks only of her appearance in school, at business, on the street, or at parties. At home she slumps into slovenly habits. Her clothes are untidy, her hair carelessly dressed. Her family becomes critical; they nag and tense."

Spitz Good Sheep Tender

The Pomeranian sheep dog, better known as the Spitz dog, is bred in most countries as a house pet, small and useless. But in its own home on the shores of the Baltic this dog is the local sheep tender. He has a fox-like face and very long hair. In color he ranges over a wide scale, but black or white is most common, and the average weight is about eight pounds. The Spitz stands cold weather much better than warm.

—14—

"Well," she said with a long, deep sigh, "me I ain't got nothin' to be proud of—but my kar'kter!"

"Your—what?"

"My maur'l kar'kter."

"You mean your character?"

"Uh—huh. It's all I got."

"You've got something else—" He reached for her hand, drew off her cotton glove and clasped her fingers. "You've got—"

But she worked her hand free of his and drew on her glove again. "My fingers is cold."

He frowned. She might be glad he wanted to hold her hand!

"You not only have my mother, but your father, on the scent!" he reproached her. "What did you do to make him suspicious?"

"It was that there futch—Aunt Rosy tol' him about it. Did he—was he to see you?" faltered the girl—and the suspense in her voice was not assumed.

"No, but I had this letter from him." He drew an envelope from his pocket and handed it to her. "Read it—and see what mischief your fudge has made all 'round, my dear!"

It was a pathetic little note, Meely felt—poor Mr. Schwenckton anxiously endeavoring to protect his wayward child, yet equally anxious to avert dissension with his powerful neighbor by casting on him any base, unfounded suspicion; pointing out to St. Croix the impossibility of any safe or honorable relation between him and his daughter, due to their unsurmountable differences in station, wealth and education. Somehow, the most pathetic part of it to Meely was the poor man's struggles to write intelligent English. "Whiles we have always been in comfortable circumstances, yet limited, but honest and honorable."—"Our females in our family being ever Virtuous and very Chaste and never disgraced us, though many temptations."

Meely remembered, as she found the words all spelled correctly, how assiduously the farmer had, one evening, to her mystification, been consulting the dictionary and how he had asked her to spell for him several long words.

She was relieved to find that Nettie was referred to only as "My daughter," and not by name.

"Poor Pop!" she sighed as she returned the letter to its envelope and passed it back to St. Croix, "he means so well by us children!"

"So you see, Meely, you've got to be careful. No more fudge!"

"I never conceited it would give all this here trouble!" she lamented, on the verge of tears.

St. Croix looked a shade less austere. "Where'd you get the spiffy coat?" he asked. "Looks for the world like English tweed."

"It's the teacher's. She left me borrow the loan of it off of her."

"Now, look here! Why can't you say simply that she lent it to you?—instead of all those superfluous words—she let you borrow the loan of it off of her! Ye gods! 'She lent it to me.' That says what you mean, doesn't it? Five words instead of a dozen!"

"Ach, well!" pouted Meely, looking again as though she were on the verge of tears—and then suddenly, to her consternation, she quite uncontrollably snickered—crushing her hand against her mouth to keep from laughing hysterically. Fortunately for her, he took it for a suppressed sob.

"There, there, my dear!" he said half impatiently, half remorsefully. "Never mind! You're past teaching anyhow! Look here, Meely, why haven't you ever mentioned that the teacher boards with you? You've talked of everyone else in the household."

"Well, you see, I had afraid you might want to be gave an interduction to her and she's so pretty, I had jealous."

"She is a pretty little thing. But I wonder," he grinned, "what my brother, Marvin, thinks of such a little ignoramus teaching a district school! I didn't know they had such crude teachers as that in the schools!"

"But she's awful good in geography! She can bind every state on the patch-work quilt!"

"'Quilt'!"

"You know—the map. And sums! You had ought to see her do sums oncet! My—goodness! To be sure, she can't talk wery correct. She gets her w's and we's mixed terrible! But United States history! Why, she knows even the footnotes, now mind I'm tellin' you!"

While she talked, he watched her with shining eyes, but it was her ravishing self, not Nettie's proficiency in sums and footnotes, that caused the shining.

"I declare, Meely, in that coat you could pass for anything at all! You look positively like a swell! Patrician, actually!" He laughed. Little dreaming, of course, that the girl understood why he laughed; why he thought it funny that Meely Schwenckton should look "patrician, actually!"

"And if I really was so pa—high-toned like I look in this here coat," she responded wistfully, "you could marry me then! Ain't, Mr. Creighton?"

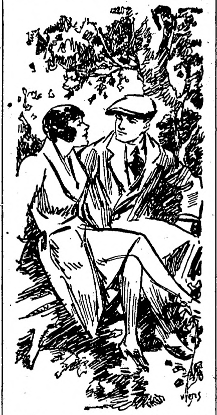
"Marriage isn't the happiest relation between a man and woman, Meely—there is a freer, happier relation," he said insinuatingly—ingratiatingly.

"But since I ain't high-toned," she broke in, "why do you take all this here worry and trouble to meet up with me?"

"You're always asking me that, Meely! I've told you—you know—"

"No, I don't. If you think I'm common—too common to marry—then what is it about me you like so good?"

"Well, if you've got to have an answer, I suppose, Meely," he said, regarding her appraisingly, "it's that you're so absolutely feminine!"



"Well," She Said with a Long, Deep Sigh, "Me, I Ain't Got Nothin' to Be Proud of—but My Kar'kter!"

"'Feminine'? Well, but my goodness!—what would you expect?"

"It makes you, to most men, my dear, so irresistible! I can't understand how you've gone this long without being married. Why haven't you married, Meely?"

"Ach, I ain't got no curiosity!"

He winced. How blatantly vulgar she could be!

However, she had given him his cue—a wedge to break down barriers.

He found himself surprised at his own sense of reluctance to come to the point with her, to put his quest to the test; an undefined apprehension of disappointment—though of course that was ridiculous—surely she "loved" and desired him, or why had she been risking so much to meet him here? Surely she was flattered at his desiring her!

He suddenly snatched her to him with passionate kisses—so fiercely that this time she was too helpless in his hard grip to avert his lips—and into her ears he poured out words not in her vocabulary—she could only guess their meaning; could only surmise that now at last he was telling her what all along she had known—that he took her for a "hussy!"—and although through all these weeks she had been expecting this climax, yet it came to her now with a shuddering shock.

In vain she struggled to free herself from his arms and his appalling words.

"Let me go—or I'll scream!" she managed to gasp at last.

He was not too far gone to know the danger of her threat—their hilltop, though isolated, being not too distant for a scream to be heard from the valley below.

Panting, baffled, he dropped his arms from about her, his face distorted with a mingled resentment and an anguish of hungry yearning. But he clutched her skirt lest she get up and run away. She only moved, however, a few inches from him on the log, her whole body trembling, her face deathly white.

"If you touch me, I'll scream!" she gasped.

He could not find breath to answer her.

"Can we," she asked scarcely above a whisper, "talk this here thing out, Mr. Creighton?"

"What's there to say? I want you! You surely want me!—I'll amply reward you—"

"You mean—buy me?"

"Of course not—any more than you'll buy me. We want each other, Meely! I'll reward you for the risk you take—reward you well—"

"Do you mean you'll give me—money?"

"A pile of it—that you can put away for your marriage—"

Meely started—this was an amazing world that was being revealed to her! She had not dreamed how far some men would go, how ruthless they could be, in degrading a girl.

"For my marriage!" she breathed. "Ach, Mr. Creighton, I didn't know you thought that low-down of me!"

Before the look of utter dismay that had come into her face, he actually felt, to his own bewilderment, a momentary embarrassment. Was she going to be sentimental and scrupulous? That would make things much too difficult—he had certainly not anticipated having to wrestle with scruples!

"I don't think 'low-down' of you, Meely. We love each other—"

"Love? But I'd think, Mr. Creighton, that if a man loved a girl he'd purtect her, not hurt her!"

"But love never hurt anyone, Meely! It enriches and blesses—because it gives ecstasy! Ecstasy, Meely!"

"Supposin' you had a sister—would you go ahead and tell her to take such blessing and riches and ecstasy as you're offerin' me? Would you?"

He ignored this ridiculous question. "Meely, love should be as free and natural to us as breathing this autumn air! It's a glorious adventure—"

"But if it's that—'a glorious adventure'—why make it a sneakin', ugly bargain that you gotta hide and be ashamed of all your life?"

"Ashamed? Look at those birds—and all the other wild, free things! Are they ashamed? Then why should we be ashamed when we're only yielding to our natures that God gave us—"

He found himself reasoning with her just as though he believed she were seriously putting up all these objections!

"Yes, well, but the birds mate," she answered, "and live in a nest and hatch young ones. That's what love is—a home and children, living and working together and bringing up children. Nothing else is good enough for me, Mr. Creighton, thank you!"

"Oh, Meely, you don't realize!—a free, spontaneous love like ours can be so much more beautiful than the deadly dull, stale marriage relation!"

"'Beautiful'! Sneakin' and hidin' for fear we'll be found out!—and goin' against the Nature you talk about!—for it's goin' against Nature when you darsen't have a child. And you call that love! That ain't love, Mr. Creighton. It's—well, what would you call it? I don't know what you'd call it!"

"If all you see in love (a lovely young creature like you!) is child-bearing!"

"But that's what love's for, ain't it?—if it's Nature you're plaguin' me to follow. And you offerin' me money yet for my marriage! As if even a common man would marry me if he knowed I was a loose woman! Even a workin' man, Mr. Creighton, wants his kids' mother to be a good woman!"

"But there's no 'right' or 'wrong' in love, Meely—love is so divinely above those superstitions! Love is—"

"I ain't thinkin'," she broke in, "so much about whether it's right or wrong. It's whether it's good sense for a girl to give herself to a man that thinks she ain't good enough to marry him! What's it worth to a girl?"

Health for Females in Open-Air Exercise

There seems to be no reason why a woman or girl should not get as much enjoyment out of life as any man or boy. Too many of our sex consider themselves hothouse flowers. If the weather is cold or stormy they will not venture outdoors. The sun must be shining and the weather warm before they will spend any time outside. Whether it is cold or warm, calm or stormy, every woman and girl should spend at least three hours daily in the open air. Not merely resting, but walking, washing or playing some game. Being in the fresh air is all right in a way, but to get 100 per cent value out of the good air, one should exercise in it. Even if the exercise consists only of deep breathing, this, at least, exercises the lungs. I find that too many women neglect their breathing. They very seldom take a deep breath. It is easy to get into the habit of taking the deep breathing; expanding the lungs to the limit if only two or three time a day. Doing this indoors is of little value. The fresh air should be taken advantage of. By this means, alone, one can obtain assurance against lung troubles. And there is no cost whatever for this treatment.—Psychology Magazine.

"Safety First"

Helen and her mother spent the summer on a farm and Helen was heartbroken when one Sunday her pet rooster had to give up his life because the minister was coming to dinner. Some time later she saw the minister coming to call, and she ran to the barn shooing the chickens, and said: "Get in quick; here comes the man that ate your father."

Mailman and Horses Engulfed in Fissure

Volcanic activity within the Vatnajokull glacier, in southeastern Iceland, recently claimed the life of a native under dramatic circumstances. The overland mail follows a route through the volcanic district, and on this particular occasion the caravan consisted of two men and seven horses loaded with mail. The weather was very rough and the men and horses were struggling their way over the mountain when an immense fissure opened immediately before the leader.

He and four horses disappeared into the chasm, while the other man had to gather all his wits to save himself and the remaining three horses. He turned back to the inhabited districts, utterly exhausted. A rescue party rushed to the scene of the tragedy, but found no traces of the unfortunate mailman.

Makes Natural Gift Pay

There is a blind student in Atlanta, Ga., who partly pays his way through law school by calling a class roll of 200 members purely from memory. He identifies each voice by the individual inflection and instantly spots the fellow who would answer for an absent mate. Every school day for a year he turned in an accurate attendance record to the officials. He supplements the income from his task by selling papers off hours before a downtown office building and can call most of his customers by name.

What Is a Tree?

Thanks to the experts in the forest reserve, distinction between a tree and a shrub has now been defined; the former must have a height of at least eight feet and a diameter of not less than two inches, otherwise it is a shrub.

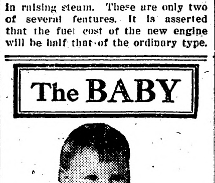
Locomotive Burns Oil

A locomotive has been designed in England which uses both steam and oil vapor for power. The engine combines internal combustion, but is used in raising steam. These are only two of several features. It is asserted that the fuel cost of the new engine will be half that of the ordinary type.



The BABY

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

When Cadbury Stepped In

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

CADBURY had not been back from the Orient more than three weeks when an article in one of the society rags caught his attention and aroused all his manly wrath.

The article hinted at the expected announcement of an engagement between the very lovely Cynthia Westcott, sculptor, and Avery Tanner, who had also but recently returned from the Orient.

Cadbury looked at the photograph of a girl whose purity and intelligence looked out from her wide-set eyes straight into his own, and he swore within himself.

"That cad and rotter isn't fit to black her little boots," he muttered. "A man like Tanner shouldn't be permitted to speak to a girl like that." Cadbury gazed long into the eyes of the girl who had already made so splendid a name for herself as a sculptor of animals.

Cadbury's animated Scotch terrior cocked a black ear and seemed so completely to agree with his master that the idea that sprang swiftly into Cadbury's brain might have emanated from that wise little dog head.

"Jock," said Cadbury, "you are going this morning to make arrangements to be sculpted or whatever these artists call what they do with clay. Will you be a good dog if I take you to the studio of this young lady?"

And so it happened that Jock and his master found themselves awaiting the approach of the well-known sculptor in her more than beautiful studio. Jock, well trained to greet the opposite sex with befitting respect, sat up swiftly and waggled a small black paw.

"You Ducky!" said Cynthia, shaking hands with Jock. "I suppose you have come for a sitting"

"That's just what he has, Miss Westcott," said Cadbury and realized that she was far more lovely than her picture.

He glanced at her beautiful white hands and—yes, a large diamond ring was already on the engagement finger. Cadbury's wrath rose a thousandfold.

He had not talked with her ten minutes before he knew beyond a doubt that her ideals were of a type quite above even the appreciation of a man like Tanner.

Cadbury squared his shoulders and began the task of getting well acquainted with the girl who was to model Jock. While she was casting her artist's spell over the brown clay in which she worked he himself was going to cast a spell over her. He had made up his mind that she should not marry Avery Tanner.

Jock was behaving wonderfully and it was quite evident that he listened wisely to all the conversation going on between his master and the girl whose soft hands so often stopped their work to pet him. He had made up his dog mind that if he were to be left alone with the girl during these sittings he would make a scene and demand that his master remain.

Cadbury remained. There was no need for Jock to worry.

Cynthia had suggested that the little sitter would no doubt be quite good if Mr. Cadbury desired to do anything else while the work was progressing.

"I wouldn't risk leaving you alone with that ferocious beast," said Cadbury decidedly, and the ferocious beast cocked his ears and quite agreed. Cynthia smiled.

She was finding the sitting most entertaining because Jock's master kept her well interested with tales of the Orient, and also was bent on casting over her the spell of a maid for a man.

It was during one of Jock's rest times that Cadbury felt unable any longer to remain silent about the mission that had in the beginning sent him to Cynthia's studio.

"Miss Westcott," he said suddenly, "if you were my sister or aunt or grandmother—or any other woman I cared a half penny about—I would not permit you to marry the man you are engaged to—he's not fit to wash your doorstep. I know him through and through because I lived beside him for a number of years."

Cynthia was gazing at him wide-eyed and uncomprehendingly.

"Whom are you referring to?" she asked.

"Tanner. I saw this a few weeks ago in the paper." And Cadbury produced the clipping. Jock was now all attention. He felt that things were developing in the way he most desired and had hopes of having a lovely companion all day instead of being left so much to his own devices while his master was away on business.

"But I'm not engaged to Avery Tanner," said Cynthia.

Cadbury felt his heart sink. If not to Tanner then—there was no hope. She was undoubtedly engaged to some worthy fellow and he had no right to lure her away from him.

"I'm frightfully sorry for having spoken," said Cadbury.

"As a matter of fact," Cynthia confided to him with a most engaging smile and flush, "I put this ring on myself—it's a family heirloom. Tanner was so persistent in following me about and demanding that I marry him that I took refuge in a fictitious love affair."

"Cynthia!" Cadbury's voice was [illegible] his eyes smiling. "I want to [illegible] of that affair."

Women Clergy

A wireless message from Berlin to the New York Times reported the decision of the general synod, according to which women may now enter the clergy in the Evangelical church as long as they remain celibates. The training for the clergy is the same for both sexes. The women will be assigned as teachers to girls' homes and hospitals, homes for the aged at prisons, and will conduct religious services for children and instruct girls' Bible classes. Women clergy will not be allowed to perform marriage ceremonies, conduct funeral services, baptize, preach or administer sacrament. Their salary will amount to about three-fourths that of male preachers.

Urges War on Weevil

A "yellow peril" among insect pests is taking the place of a "native American" nuisance, according to O. E. Gookins, of Ottawa, Kan., in an address before the meeting at Omaha of the American Association of Cereal Chemists. The once troublesome grain weevil, he said, is becoming extinct, but its decline is accompanied by the increase of the rice weevil. The two insects look very much alike, but the rice weevil can easily be distinguished because it can fly. Mr. Gookins recommended granary fumigation as a cheap and sure method of finishing off the granary weevil for good, and for combating the hordes of the rice weevil.

"First Aid—Home Remedy Week" Coming

The National Association of Retail Druggists is urging greater advertising publicity for "First Aid—Home Remedy Week," fixed for March 18-24. This "sales baby," dedicated to the druggists of America by Sterling Products (Incorporated) is seven years old this month. It has scored six successive triumphs, and Secretary Samuel C. Henry, in urging the general adoption of the national slogan, "Fill That Medicine Chest Now," says: "Unpreparedness is seldom, if ever, due to willful neglect, but generally attributable to thoughtlessness or lack of foresight."

With the aid of "Little Johnny Advertising," the sponsors of this national merchandising campaign, which is really a drive against needless suffering, hope to induce householders to be better able to cope with sudden illness and unforeseen accident.

This is Arno Steinhauer's biggest one months production since he entered into the dairy business—a mighty fine showing. J. P. Augustine still holds the honor of delivering the most butterfat for anyone month, which was for Jan. 1927, at that time he delivered 567lb a considerable increase over January this year. F. D. Voth holds 3rd place in this report, which means one move up since last report, that time he held 4th place. Anton Rodahl is coming back into the lime light, it has been several months since his name appeared in the first five on the list, but at this writing he is going even better. No. 5 in this report is not a new potron, nevertheless it is his first time among the first five. It is with the greatest of pleasure to me to be able to list his name as 5th in this report. Carl is a mighty fine fellow and very reasonable and agreeabl to do business with.

I believe one big reason for the advancement Mr. Lindholm has made in dairying is his modern, newly built, barn. I am sure that in order to do profitable dairying you must have a cozy place to house your cows, where you can have drinking cups for them, and everything handy for the man that takes care of them. A place like that means more milk at less cost as well as less work for the man in charge. Most of us scarcely believe what it means to have water and drinking cups in the barn. When you stop to think that milk contains at least 85 per cent water is it not reasonable to believe that it is very important that the cows get all the water they want and when ever they want it?

Speaking of modern barns, I know some of you will say that you are to old a man to go into such an expense. This no doubt is true in some few cases, but the best proof I know of is to inquire of the farmer that has such a barn and ask him whether he would like to go back to the old barn or have the new one which he built, which is modern in every way. You often hear the boys cuss the cows as well as the old farm. A new barn and cows that makes a profit is the two big factors in keeping the boys on the farm. The big draw-back in dairying is that you are tied-up more or less, especially so morning and evening. Outside of that I shall never believe the work is very hard.

We can not expect that all boys raised on a farm should stay there, but there is no question but it is the right place for most of them. They themselves would realize this if they were sent out into the world without much money, no trade and a limited education. I talked with people when I was in Minneapolis last week that know something about what a common laborer as well as others have to contend with down there. Just think of paying rent, eats, clothe yourself and family out of your days wages and very often many of the employers have not had work for them more half of the time and less.

One way to incourage the boys to stay on the farm is a course at the Northwest School of Ariculture at Crookston. It is queer that most folks have felt it worth while to send their boys and girls away to school when they wanted them to prepare themselves for life and after giving them such courses as High School and Business College, but the boy that was to remain on the farm was absolutely forgotten as far as an education is concerned. Give him a chance with the rest and don't forget the farmer that is to make a success right now and moreso in the future needs an education as well as heads of other business institutions.

How about sending a few boys from Holt down to the N. S. A. at Crookston next week for the Junior Short Course? It is open to any boy or girl 12 to 20 years of age. The cost for the week besides the fare is $3.00 I am sure it would be well worth while and boys and girls should take advantage of this course.

Remember 84 per cent of all graduates from the Agriculture schools are back on the farm.

Short Lessons in Dairying

LESSON XVI

GREAT COWS: Note the man who has a herd of high producin cows and you will find a man who knows his cows individually and calls them by name and knows their relationship—mothers and daughters, etc. He not only knows his own cows but he knows the great cows of the breed to which his cows belong.

A Jersey breeder who has studied his cows and his breed will know Mary Anne of St. Lambert, one of the first great Jersey cows in America. The Holstein man may trace the blood of his cows back to Mercedes that great Holstein cow that held the championship for milk and butter production in 1883. The Guernsey breeder will tell of Yeksa Sunbeam the first cow in the world to make 1000 pounds of butter in a year, bred on a farm near Garden City, Minn., and sold about until she was picked up from a Milkman's herd near Minniaeolis for $70 and taken to Wisconsin where she made her great record. The man who bought her knew that in her veins was the blood of great producing cows and she proved to be the greatest of them all. The Ayrshire men know Jane Armour and Auchenbrain Brown Kate and the farmers who have Brown Swiss know of College Bravura.

A great cow is the most wonerful animal in the world. Any good dairy cow on the average dairy farm is. A production of from six to twelve thousand pounds of milk and from three to four hundred pounds of butterfat in a year, a production that a good dairy cow is capable of making, is wonderful and a farmer who has such cows is assured prosperity. Dairy cows are worth studying, are worth knowing.

Plans for the celebration of the eight hundredth anniversary of a church in Oslo, Norway, are being discussed. Drink Water If Back or Kidneys Hurt

Begin Taking Salts If You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Weakness

Too much rich food forms acids which excite and overwork the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Flush the kidneys occasionally to relieve them like you relieve the bowels, removing acids, waste and poison, else you may feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, the stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get irritated, obliging one to get up two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste, begin drinking water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine and bladder disorders disappear.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help prevent serious kidney and bladder disorders. By all means, drink lots of good water every day.

Wrong to Call Human Heart Automatic Pump

The accepted idea of the heart as an automatic pump sending blood to all parts of the body may have to be revised.

A famous German heart specialist, Doctor Mendelsohn, says the heart is simply a governor to control the orderly flow of the blood, this current itself being due to the constant intake and outgo of liquid caused by chemical action in the body cells.

Doctor Mendelsohn says the heart, a small muscle the size of a man's fist, could not possibly be capable of driving the tenacious mass of the blood through the entire body. He cites invalids with hearts so flabby as to release scarcely any energy, yet they lived for years with sufficient blood circulation.—Popular Science Monthly.

A hammock is the spoonholder used at many a love feast.

Gossips seldom invent lies; but they knowingly peddle them.

The BABY

No mother in this enlightened age would give her baby something she did not know was perfectly harmless, especially when a few drops of plain Castoria will right a baby's stomach and end almost any little ill. Fretfulness and fever, too; it seems no time until everything is serene.

That's the beauty of Castoria; its gentle influence seems just what is needed. It does all that castor oil might accomplish, without shock to the system. Without the evil taste. It's delicious! Being purely vegetable, you can give it as often as there's a sign of colic; constipation; diarrhea; or need to aid sound, natural sleep.

Just one warning: it is genuine Fletcher's Castoria that physicians recommend. Other preparations may be just as free from all doubtful drugs, but no child of this writer's is going to test them! Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold.

Minneapolis—The most prosperous year in its history was reported by the Land O'Lakes Creameries when an advance guard of more than 450 creamery operators from Minnesota and other sections of the northwest gathered for the convention of the creameries' association. Business during last year totaled $46,315,000, an increase of 15 per cent over the figures for the preceding year.

Minneapolis—Honors of the state were conferred upon five farm women who have been selected after a spirited competition as to leading homemakers of rural Minnesota. Those honored were Mrs. W. F. The navy will require more than 800,000 pounds. In 1927 the Land O' Lakes Creameries, Inc., furnished the navy with between 450,000 and 500,000 pounds of butter.

St. Paul—Minnesota has 36,665 cases of tuberculosis, many of which have not been detected, Dr. S. Marx White, president of the state board of health, said in promising co-operation between that board and the National Tuberculosis association and the Minnesota Public Health association, in an "early diagnosis" campaign. "The death rate in the state from tuberculosis has declined from 119 per 100,000 in 1911 to 58.4 per 100,000 in 1927."

Duluth—With the fire season only a little more than a month off, state forestry rangers are making final preparations to guard the forests of northern Minnesota during the summer months. Although some years there have been a few scattered small fires earlier, the season is usually regarded as opened about April 15 and all new towers, cabins and other equipment must be completed before that time. Twelve new towers are being erected in the state for use this summer.

Cement Sticks Tight

Some recent tests on the strength of the bond between concrete and building tile show that the stronger the concrete, the greater strength of the bond. Specimens cured dry had a slightly higher average strength than those cured damp. Furthermore, the greatest strength of adhesion was where the mortar had been applied to dry tile, was slightly less where the tile had been sprinkled, and was weakest where the tile had been saturated.

Had Saved His Money

A Polish man who had worked on an Otis farm for several years was told by his employer that the farm was not paying and that his services would have to be dispensed with. The farmer told him that there was no hurry, that he could leave any time, to which the hired man answered that he was ready to leave at once. He took a pickax, went to an obscure corner, dug up a large milk can, brought it in and dumped the contents on the kitchen floor. It was money and amounted to more than $1,700, money that he had saved while in the employ of the Otis farmer.—Boston Globe.

"It's worth a moment of the keenest happiness mortals can know! Divine happiness! Isn't that enough?"

"'Divine'? I thought that there word meant somepin else—I thought it belonged to Jesus—"

"A divine moment, Meely, such as few ever know in the stereotyped marriage relation, my girl, believe me!"

"It ain't that I expec' you to marry me, Mr. Creighton—I know I can't rise to that. But if I can't rise to that, I can't fall to nothin' else between you and me, neither!"

The earnestness of her resistance was beginning to alarm him. Surely she did not mean all she was saying! She only wanted to be coaxed, persuaded. Surely it only needed a little patience on his part to bring her to the yielding point? But patience was a thing he was so unused to exercising that it taxed his nerves and his temper almost more than he could bear. The little hussy must be very experienced, she knew so well how to enhance her own value and stimulate his desire by her stand-offishness!

"Think, Meely, how stupid it is not to seize every chance that comes our way (few enough they are!) for happiness! Look at all the colorless years ahead of you, and don't miss this one ineffable hour!—such as will never be offered you once you're married!"

"Will your marriage hold you from any more such hours?"

"That's neither here nor there—my marriage, Meely, is quite another affair—"

"Meanin' it ain't none of my affairs? Well, but it's the affair of your wife, anyhow, whether you have any such grand hours—"

"My dear, we won't discuss my possible wife!"

"I'd feel awful sorry," said Meely, slowly shaking her head, "for your wife, Mr. Creighton."

He laughed uneasily. "Judging by the way I'm pursued by marriageable girls, Meely, your view of me as a husband can't possibly be the one generally held by many ladies of high degree! You don't know your luck, my girl!"

"Yes, well, but them 'ladies of high degree' run after you to marry you. You ain't astin' me to marry you."

"I'm offering you a love such as I shall probably never feel for the girl I marry! Oh, Meely!" He reached for her hand, but she drew it away.

"Meely! You'll lose me, you know, if you keep this up! You can't keep me dangling forever, you know!" The words, "keep me dangling," startled his own ears, so ridiculous was the idea of a girl such as Meely keeping him "dangling"! "If you do lose me, you'll only have yourself to thank!"

"What would I be losin' in losin' you?" she asked as one humbly seeking information.

"You'd be losing happiness, wouldn't you, my dear?"

"Happiness! Would I keep happiness—and you—by doing what you want? It's put out that you're going to marry your cousin—a grand lady with such a title or what. After you've got her, where would I come in?"

Ah, thought St. Croix, light dawning on his troubled mind, so it was that that was holding her back!—she had heard of his betrothal and was jealous!

"I give you my word, Meely, that I am not—as yet—engaged."

"I heard you was," she repeated stubbornly. "What would that cousin think of you if she knowed—about me?"

"That need not worry you!"

"Oh, needn't it!"

"Why should it? I have not seen this cousin since we were both children—and I am not—definitely—betrothed to her."

"But you're plannin' to be."

"Well, surely, my dear girl, it will hurt you far less if I marry some one I don't love—some one I don't really know—a person I've not seen since she was a homely little bow-legged kid!"

"'Bow-legged'!" exclaimed Meely indignantly.

"Yes, and pigeon-toed and towheaded and freckle-faced! You'll not be hurt by my marriage," he exclaimed fervently, "you beautiful thing!"

"Yes, well, but how about hurtin' her! When you even love another one!"

"She'll be doing the same thing, probably!" he defended himself. "It's purely a family arrangement," he answered, frowning impatiently at being forced into a discussion of his personal affairs; to his peculiar ideas of fitness it was a desecration to even so much as name his cousin—his future wife, no doubt—to a girl like Meely Schwenckton.

"Are you so sure she'll be willin' to marry you without lovin' you and without your lovin' her?" Meely asked wonderingly.

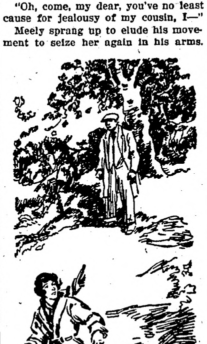
Nothing could have been more distasteful to him than answering such a question; dwelling at such length on this unseemly topic. But if to win her over he must pay that price, then pay it he would.

"Look here, Meely, perhaps I owe it to you to explain the situation to you. Lady Sylvia St. Croix will marry me because her family needs money—their estate, since the war, is gone to punk and my father will restore it and supply the income to keep it up. I will marry her because I shall enjoy the prestige in England which the marriage will give to me—and my children. So you see how entirely outside of my marriage will be my relation with you—how little it can affect it—"

"Well!" Meely severely pronounced judgment. "I may not be such a high aristocrat, but I'd be above such a low-down wicked marriage like that! There's better things to marry for and live for than savin' an old estate!"

"Oh, come, my dear, you've no least cause for jealousy of my cousin, I—"

Meely sprang up to elude his movement to seize her again in his arms.



Before He Could Lay a Finger on Her to Stop Her, She Had Turned and Fled.

"It's time I got home—Pop will be missin' me."

He sprang up too—his face almost purple with the strain of his self-restraint—but the look in her eyes halted him. One step toward her, her eyes said to him, and she would shriek to arouse the countryside.

"Meely," he exclaimed huskily, "what do you mean? Why, if you don't love me, have you led me on all these weeks? Why have you come here to meet me? Why? Tell me that—why?"

"To find out," she answered in an even tone, "what sort of a man you are. And," she added with a smile that pitied him, "I have found out!"

Before he could lay a finger on her to stop her, she had turned and fled.

By the time he had recovered from the bewildering shock of her words, her tone, she was far down the hill—too far for him to overtake her—even if he had not realized, to his stunned amazement, the absolute uselessness of overtaking her.

That he had been repudiated by this girl who for nearly three months had let him treat her contemptuously, had submitted to his bullying, his rudeness, his irritability, had accepted and returned his lavish caresses! All the way down the hill and along the highway toward the spot near the schoolhouse, where today he had parked his car, he stared incredulously at the amazing fact.

But a scene that met his bewildered gaze when he was about to get into his car, parked near the schoolhouse, did not decrease his mental confusion, nor serve to soothe his rasped nerves and outraged vanity.

Marvin Creighton, approaching William Penn schoolhouse at half-past five that afternoon, on his way to his temporary home at Absalom Punts' cottage, noticed on the road far ahead of him a slim girlish figure in a long loose coat, hurrying along the highway. Though the daylight was fading, her carriage of herself and the set of her clothing were so conspicuously different from that of any country girl one was apt to meet alone on the road at this hour that even in this dimness that hurrying figure was sharply impressive.

Curiosity made him quicken his pace to catch up with her. But before he had overtaken her, she had arrived at William Penn schoolhouse, where, to his surprise, she stopped and went in.

Then it was, as he had half suspected, half hoped, a little dreaded, Miss Schwenckton!

A few yards before he reached the school he came upon a roadster, parked along the road, which he recognized as his brother's. The idea stabbed him that this attractive young teacher and St. Croix might be having a rendezvous in the school! Was St. Croix in there with her now? He was such a philanderer—sometimes so unscrupulous—the girl ought to be put on her guard.

"But darned if I want to be the one to warn her! And if ever a girl seemed capable of looking out for herself, she's it!"

In a minute he was at the schoolhouse door. It was slightly ajar; he pushed it open a bit wider and, not entering, glanced in. The sight that met his eye made him draw back precipitately—Miss Schwenckton, her back toward the door, was standing on her platform disrobing! She had already taken off her coat and frock, her white shoulders bared—

There was no one else in the schoolroom, yet—

Marvin stumbled back a pace from the door. But though the thought that pierced him made him call himself "a cad," yet as he stood there wondering whether he should knock, he felt cold all over; and even while he hesitated, in what seemed to him an incredibly short time, she suddenly appeared before him in the doorway clad in a jacket suit and a jaunty sports hat! He was so taken aback, so utterly confused, that he could not move or speak, but stood as stock-still as the wooden posts of the school porch.

At sight of a man standing motionless at her door in the gathering gloom, she cried out in alarm—which brought him to himself.

"Don't be frightened! It's only—your superintendent!"

She gave a little gasp of relief. "Only! And of whom, pray, should I be more frightened?—though the schoolroom being empty just now, of course you can't bully me into teaching geography for your entertainment—my good luck!"

"Going home now?"

"Yes."

"Then"—he took from her hand the big door-key and the books she had in her arms—"may I walk with you?"

When he had locked the school door, he glanced up the road to the waiting car. Its lights had been turned on, illuminating the road over a wide area, and he saw that his brother, standing in front of his car, was witnessing his coming out of the schoolhouse with Miss Schwenckton. She, he observed, was viewing with a frank surprise the lighted car and its owner a few rods away. That look of surprise seemed so genuine, it was hard to believe that his own unexpected arrival at the school had foiled a meeting between these two. And yet it would be so like St. Croix to seek a furtive love affair with a charming girl like Miss Schwenckton when he'd die before he would openly associate with anyone of a class outside his own!—like a parvenu uncertain of his position, rather than like a man born to a secure place in the sun! But that a girl of Miss Schwenckton's spirit should accept such cowardly attentions seemed incredible. And this mystery of her changing her clothing in the schoolroom!—

As they turned their backs on the car and went on their way, neither of them referred to it—though Meely was so absorbed in wondering whether St. Croix had recognized her that her sense of Marvin's interesting companionship was less keen than it would otherwise have been.

"Does your work always detain you so late as this at your school?" he asked with subtle guile. She didn't know he had seen her coming along the highway!

Brother of Tecumseh Neglected by History

Elkswatawa, younger brother of Tecumseh, was largely responsible for the part that great Indian warrior and statesman played in organizing a federation of the red men to oppose the encroachments of the whites. In 1805 Elkswatawa proclaimed himself a religious leader and began to arouse the tribes of Indiana, Ohio and Illinois, to the great disturbance of the settlers. His doctrines were not primarily revolutionary, but temperance and total abstinence were tenets, together with reverence for old age and sympathy for the infirm. He also urged his people to resist intermarriage and to preserve their own customs and costumes. This being in line with what all Indians had held as ideal previous to Caucasian invasion, his preaching caused much excitement among the tribes and fear among the whites. It was the response of the Indians to his brother's pleading that started Tecumseh on his mission in the cause of federation which took him to the Cherokees and the other more civilized tribes of the South, in the course of which he covered many thousand miles.

They done so, and he went on the stage in his everyday clothes with ink all over his hands and on the side of his nose, and acted just as he does every day, and made such a hit, I'gorry, that the Orpheum circuit hired him at a big salary to do tramps all up and down the line!"—Kansas City Star.

Better Light, Better Work

Tests have been made in England recently to determine the effect of various degrees of artificial lighting on the accuracy and speed of the individual. Typesetting by hand was the work chosen, and in order to avoid week-end conditions the tests were made in the middle of the week. It was found that the output steadily increased as the intensity of artificial illumination increased. The total errors and the percentage of inverted letters decreased.

Sun's Pathway Differs

The naval observatory says the more rapid rising and setting of the sun at the equator is not due to the greater circumference of the earth at that point, but to the fact that at the equator the sun rises and sets in a path perpendicular to the horizon, while in all other latitudes this path is inclined from the perpendicular.

HOW TO GROW BETTER OATS

By T. R. Stanton, Agronomist in charge of oat investigations, Office of Cereal Crops and Diseases, Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Best Soils for Oats

THE soils of the Corn Belt generally are well adapted to oats. Soil productivity in this area is less important for oat culture than proper cultivation and handling. The land must be well drained. On wet, undrained soils oats may be injured by plant diseases. On the other hand, oats require more water to produce a pound of dry matter than any other cereal. The crop, therefore, should be grown on land that naturally retains moisture. Loam soils usually produce better oats than the more sandy ones.

Oats In The Rotation

A DESIRABLE rotation for oats is one that includes both tilled and legume crops. Oats are quite adaptable, and rotations usually are arranged to meet the needs of other crops, rather than those of oats. Winter wheat can not be sown where corn remains standing in the field until freezing weather before harvesting. As a result, spring-sown oats follow the corn crop with better adjustment of labor and time. They also fill requirements as a nurse crop for clover and grass.

A common rotation in the Corn Belt consists of corn, oats, and grass or clover. This sometimes is extended to a 5-year rotation of corn two years, oats one year, and clover or grass two years. Usually this rotation is reduced to a 4-year sequence, including two crops of corn and one each of oats and clover, or one crop each of corn and oats and two of clover and grass. Another rotation is corn, oats, winter wheat, one year each, followed by clover and grass for one or more years.

AVOID THE SMUT TAX

Treating Seed Oats for Smut Pays Big Dividends.

THE yield and quality of oats may be materially increased by treating the seed with formaldehyde to control smut. Oat smut takes a heavy toll each year. This can be almost entirely prevented by seed treatment. The formaldehyde may be applied as a spray, a sprinkle or dip.

The spray method: Place the seed to be treated on a clean barn floor or in a wagon box. Mix one pint of formaldehyde (37 per cent by weight) with one pint of water and pour into a quart sprayer. This amount of solution will treat 50 bushels of oats. If a smaller quantity of seed is to be treated use a proportionately smaller quantity of the solution. Shovel the oats from one pile to another, at the same time spraying each shovelful. After the oats are sprayed cover the heap of seed with canvas or sacks which also have been sprayed with the solution. Allow the cover to remain five hours, when the oats may be bagged or sown.

A modification of this method which consists of using one pint of formaldehyde to ten gallons of water is sometimes used. Apply by spraying about one pint of the solution to each 5 bushels of seed in the manner described above for the half and half solution.

In applying the spray treatments care must be exercised to avoid irritation of the eyes, nose, and throat by the formaldehyde vapor.

The sprinkle method: This is a time-tried and effective method. The seed is placed in a pile as for the spray method. Make up a solution by adding one pint of formaldehyde to 40 gallons of water. Apply the solution with sprinkling can at the rate of about 1 gallon to each bushel of seed, the oats being shoveled from one pile to another. Then shovel the oats into a pile and cover as in the spray method. The covers should remain on for at least two hours, or as long as over night. The seed is then spread out to dry sufficiently to permit sowing or bagging.

The dip method: This method is essentially the same as the sprinkling method just described, except that the seed is dipped directly into the solution until every seed is wet, instead of being sprinkled.

For the sprinkle and dip methods care should be exercised to avoid freezing of the wet seed and to prevent heating.

Surplus seed treated with formaldehyde may be fed to farm animals without injury, provided it has been spread out and aired for a few days.

Light

The bureau of standards says that both light and heat are electromagnetic vibrations which carry energy as does any system of waves. Light is now made by many to include invisible waves called ultra-violet and infra-red. Strictly, light means luminous vibrations, or visible waves. Radiant heat is simply the energy aspect of any electromagnetic waves. In the strict sense light must be visible, but all light contains vibrant energy which may be identified as heat.

Methods Of Seeding Oats

A CONSIDERABLE acreage of oats still is sown broadcast in the Corn Belt, especially on disked corn stubble. Experimental results indicate that slightly higher average yields may be expected from drilling than from broadcasting. The advantages of drilling are the most economical and uniform distribution of the seed, a more even germination, and a more uniform stand. On a well prepared, moist seed bed from 1 to 1½ inches is sufficient depth for oats.

Treatment of Oats After Seeding.

IN THE Corn Belt usually no treatment is given oats after the crop is sown. On spring plowed land which is cloddy and dry, germination and early growth sometimes may be improved by rolling after seeding. Rolling is seldom advisable, however, after seeding in a well prepared seed bed. If a crust forms on the surface of the surface of the soil as a result of excessive rains immediately after seeding, harrowing with a spike-tooth harrow with the teeth slanting backward often is advisable. The teeth will stir the soil sufficiently to break the crust and kill most of the small weed seedlings without destroying too many of the young oat plants. Large weeds which develop with the crop often can be removed advantageously by pulling or cutting. Preventing the spread of noxious weeds should more than repay the cost of such removal.

When and How to Harvest Oats.

OATS are ready for harvesting when the kernels are in the hard dough stage. This is at about the time the panicles turn yellow. Under normal weather conditions the panicles usually show a greenish white color for several days before turning yellow. If a large acreage is awaiting harvest this is a good time to begin cutting, as there will be less loss by shattering, and the grain will be of good color. If the oats are cut too early the kernels will shrivel in curing and the quality of the grain will be lowered.

In the Corn Belt oats usually are cut with a grain binder. The header and combine harvester-thresher are as yet little used in this section for harvesting oats. Recent studies on the use of the combine for oats in the Corn Belt indicate that they may be efficiently and economically harvested and threshed by this method, provided a large enough crop is grown to warrant the initial cost of the machine.

MAKE A GOOD SHOCK

Good Shocking Protects Oats from The Weather.

THE main objects in shocking oats are to permit proper curing, and at the same time to protect the grain from weathering as much as possible. If the oats are green or weedy, and weather conditions are favorable, the bundles may be allowed to cure for a few hours or even a day in the carrier row before shocking. Two kinds of shocks may be built, round, or long shocks. If the grain is fully ripe and free from weeds the round shock usually is the most satisfactory. It stands up better in windy weather and protects the oats from weathering better than the long shock. If, however, the oats are green and the bundles contain weeds, and especially if the weather is rainy and unfavorable for harvesting, the long shock is preferable. It permits air to pass through the shock more freely. In most districts the long shock is left uncapped. Cap bundles when used should be broken and placed in such manner so that they will not blow off. Oats should never be shocked when damp with dew or rain, as the grain may mold. Skill and care in shocking will pay big dividends where the crop may be subjected to frequent storms and rains while curing in the field.

Stacking Oats Improves Quality

THE common practice in much of the Corn Belt is to thresh from the shock. Stacking has a number of advantages which offset the reduced cost of threshing from the shock. Stacking insures cleaner threshing and drier and better grain. The oats go through the sweat in the stack and are completely cured at time of threshing. Whether oats are allowed to stand in the shock until threshed or stacked depends on local conditions. Stacking is advisable where early threshing from the shock is not possible, because of the rush of other farm work or the lack of a threshing outfit.

It usually is best to make a stack foundation by laying down fence posts or rails or other light timbers to keep the oats from absorbing water from the ground. In building a stack that will shed water it is essential to keep the center high, well tramped, and free from holes. The outer row of bundles should not be tramped, so that when the stack settles the straws in the exposed butts will slope downward and shed water. The stack should be "topped out" well to give it as steep a slope as possible.

Efficient Threshing of Oats

IT IS the best practice to allow oats to become well cured in the shock or stack before threshing. Efficient threshing then is assured if the grain is dry.

Where registered pedigreed varieties are being grown, a special effort should be made to see that the separator is thoroughly cleaned at the beginning of the run. Attention to this detail will insure the keeping of varieties in a pure condition for a number of years. It also will prevent the spread of noxious weed seeds from one farm to another.

Those were great old days, I tell you
An' I'd like to go again
To a sizzlin'-hot old ball game
Like we used to have 'em then.
I can see Chet Walborn pitchin',
And there's Walt behind the bat—
Gosh, it scares those poor dubs loony
When Chet steams 'em in like that!

I can see Jim Kibble sprintin'
'Round them bases like a streak.
See, the crowd has gone plumb crazy—
Watch that Ward boy try to sneak
In from third—Come on!—He made it!
Well, I guess that baby's there!
Look! Oh man, can't old Doc Watson
Slam that apple thru the air!

Yes, those roarin' home-town ball games
Mean a lot to me today,
An' I still am tellin' people
How that Granville team could play.
Folks, I wouldn't take a million
For the happiness I find
When some boyhood recollection
Brings them good old days to mind.

Interesting Light on Old Labor Conditions

An agreement for preventing labor disputes in the building industry, drawn up 1,500 years ago at Sardis, in Asia Minor, reveals some interesting parallels between labor conditions then and today. The document, Electrical Workers' Journal makes known, is an agreement entered into by the Sardis union of building artisans and the artisans of the city.

Some of the most interesting provisions are as follows:

"That we will complete all pieces of work given out to us by any one of the employers, provided that the employer is prompt in paying to us the wages mutually agreed upon.

"If, when a man undertaking the work declines it, some one of us be found neither doing anything nor performing work in accordance with the porvisions herein written, we bind ourselves to pay (the sum) as a fine to be used for the city's public works. . . .

"And for the full discharge of the fine we pledge, under a lien both general and individual, all our property, present and future, of every kind and sort."

Genius Accorded to Old Southern Mammy

"The southern mammy was America's first woman artist. She created our choicest and most original food compositions," declares Farm and Fireside's cooking expert in reviewing the home life of George Washington.

"Washington had one of these mammies who made history in the kitchen," continues the article, "and their art had much to do with the happy social life of the home and the world-wide fame of the South, for its hospitality in Colonial days could not have been without the genius of these dusky women."

Washington's particular colored cook was famed for miles around and Mount Vernon became noted for its hospitality. The dinners given within its beamed dining room played an important part in Washington's life and in the political development of the country. At that festal board the fiery patriots of the Revolution decided the future of the new nation.

The World's Greatest

These are the men that H. G. Wells regards as the greatest in history, and why:

Jesus: As a man takes precedence of all others by virtue of the new and simple doctrines which He brought into the world—the universal, loving fatherhood of God. Buddha: Although in different language, he, too, had called men to self-forgetfulness 500 years before. Aristotle: Laid the foundations for research and classification of scientific knowledge. Bacon: Set men to thinking along new, fresh lines; who between 1210-1293 prophesied the steamboat and airplane. Asoka: The only military monarch on record who abandoned warfare after victory. Lincoln: Embodies the essential characteristic of America; standing for the quality of opportunity, for the right and the chance of the child of the humblest home to reach the highest place.

Various Gases

The bureau of standards says that water gas, usually enriched with oil, is the principal gas manufactured in the United States for city supply. Most natural gas has a higher heating value and is, therefore, more valuable, although it does not command as high a price as water gas, because the supply is usually so great. Oil gas is a term used to designate a number of gases manufactured from oil. The differences between these various gases depend upon the relative proportions of the several constituents which make up the mixtures.

No Use for Soft Couches

It was natural, on account of the rigors of climate, that interest in sleeping arrangements should be pronounced in northern countries. Surely no southern race evolved the feather bed. Among the humble Saxon folk, writes Estelle H. Ries, in the Mentor Magazine beds were simple sacks filled with straw and laid on benches or chests. This use of straw continued for centuries, even on the beds of kings. The covers were usually the skins of wild beasts. It must be said, however, that these robust people had a certain contempt for a soft couch, so that often their choice of a hard one was voluntary.

Date Of Seeding Oats

FOR success in growing oats the seed should be sown early. In the Corn Belt, the best date of seeding ordinarily is the earliest that the land can be worked as permitted by soil moisture and weather conditions. Late seeding usually results in a decided reduction in yield and quality.

Lime and Potash Are Big Clover Essentials

Waste of Time to Plant Crop in Poor Soil.

It is a waste of time and seed to plant clover in soil that needs lime and potash. Such is the conclusion to be drawn from the results of tests conducted at the New Jersey agricultural experiment station during the past year.

Clover failed to grow when planted in trial plots where chemical tests showed the need of lime. Timothy and clover together yielded about 1,736 pounds to the acre on soil that was limed but not fertilized with potash. Addition of potash to other limed plots brought a yield of 3,105 pounds of hay to the acre. In the second cutting, on the limed plot without potash, 300 pounds of hay to the acre was obtained and on the limed and potash treated plot 1,000 pounds.

The soil chemists at the experiment station explain that lime is needed to counteract soil acids, as clover can neither germinate well nor grow in an acid soil. Clover absorbs large quantities of potash and if large crops are removed the soil is soon exhausted of the available potash. Experiments have shown that 25 to 50 pounds of muriate of potash to the acre usually meets the requirements of clover. Sometimes 100 pounds may be needed.

Where the soil has been property inoculated with nitrogen-fixing bacteria it is not necessary to use nitrogen fertilizers on clover. The plant has the ability to obtain its nitrogen from the air through the aid of these bacteria.

Sharp Disk Harrow Will Give Good Satisfaction

Don't start the spring work with a dull disk harrow. It is just as inefficient as a dull razor, only you can't feel it quite so keenly. If the disks have nicks in the edges, or if one side is rusted from standing on the ground, it will greatly lessen the quality of its work.

If it has been kept in fairly good condition, you can probably sharpen the disk satisfactorily with a hand-grinding outfit, but if it is very dull you had better take it to a shop with a power grinder and have the job well done. Sharpness is particularly important if you are to use the disk over a stalk field so that it has to cut through a large amount of stalks and trash.

Other things to examine are the bearings. The chances are that the old grease is hardened and dried, and the only way you can get the bearings thoroughly lubricated is to take the disks off and scrape out all the old grease and dirt. It is very desirable to equip such a machine as the disk with grease cups which are adapted to the use of a grease gun, so that the lubricant may be forced into every part of the bearings several times during the season. A small amount of grease in the right place saves an immense amount of wasted labor.

Wayside Markets Become a National Institution

Millions of motorists have been reading signs like this: Beets, peas, squash, apples and honey, fresh eggs, 35 cents, and seeing these signs have bought. Small farmers everywhere have put up these little roadside markers where each year increasing thousands have purchased fresh produce. These wayside markets are becoming a national institution, bringing back the direct touch of farmer and consumer, says the Illinois Farmer. Probably some middlemen and retail groceries are displeased, but the consumer likes it. For nine months in the year the consumer must meet the demands of the merchants in the large cities, and therefore will have scant sympathy with him in this problem. This is growing into an immense business and the consumer is rejoicing in his ability to get really fresh vegetables and eggs without having to pay any number of persons for carrying them from the farm to his door.

Plant Forage Designed for the Silo Nearby

In planting forage designed for the silo, a few details should be kept in mind. First, it should be grown as close to the silo or point of feeding as possible, because silage is bulky and should not be hauled any farther than necessary. A crop that is grown on rich soil under favorable conditions is generally of better quality than one grown on poor soil. Quick growth has less woody fiber and is more digestible and palatable; therefore, the land should have enough fertilizer to make a rapid growth.

Oats As A Nurse Crop

OATS as a nurse crop are not as satisfactory as some others, the foliage being too dense and the crop drawing too heavily on soil moisture. These objections are largely overcome by seeding early, short-strawed varieties. To insure obtaining the best stands of clover or grass, it sometimes is advisable to seed oats at less than the normal seeding rate where oats are grown for grain. Oats should be drilled when used as a nurse crop. The uniformity of space between the rows permits more light and air to reach the grass or clover plants than is possible if the oats are sown broadcast.

Seed Bed Preparation

OATS respond well to proper seedbed preparation. Where oats follow corn the seed frequently is broadcasted without any previous preparation of the land covered by disking and harrowing. It is better practice however, to disk the land before seeding, regardless of how the seed is to be sown. The seed bed for oats should be rather firm beneath with two or three inches of loose, finely pulverized, mellow soil on the surface. If soil conditions are at all favorable a fairly satisfactory seed bed usually may be prepared by two single diskings or one double disking followed by harrowing. Where oats are to be sown on land with standing cornstalks, it is advisable to drag down or break the stalks before disking. The disks should be set to run from 3 to 4 inches deep. Lap disking, usually leaves the surface more level than cross or diagonal disking, although the latter method frequently is used. A second disking is necessary to cover the seed when sown broadcast.

Rate Of Seeding Oats

THE amount of seed to sow depends to some extent on the condition and fertility of the soil, the method of seeding, and the size of seed. More seed is needed on weedy, poorly prepared land than on a well-prepared seed-bed, but excess seed can not be considered a substitute for good seedbed preparation. The usual rate of drilling is from 8 to 12 pecks per acre. For sowing broadcast the rates vary from 10 to 16 pecks. Large seeded varieties should be sown at a heavier rate than small-seeded ones.

FOREST HILLS SCHEDULES BIG TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS FOR THIS SUMMER

Many Great Players From Overseas Will Compete at Famous Long Island Courts Where Dust Has Been Outlawed—Betty Nuthall Expected.

FOREST HILLS, Long Island, with its beautiful tennis stadium, will again be the scene of stirring tournaments this summer, with considerable amount of the limelight focussed on women players.

The Wightman Cup matches of 1927, which decide the women's team championship between this country and England has been scheduled for August 12 and 13 by the International Play Committee of the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association.

Since 1923 this is the third time this feature has been on the lists of the West Side Tennis Club at Forest Hills. Wimbledon was given the honor in 1924 and last year.

Among the American candidates are Miss Helen Wills, Mrs. George W. Wightman, Mrs. Molla B. Mallory, Miss Elizabeth Ryan, Mrs. Marion Z. Jessup, Miss Eleanor Goss, Miss Martha Bayard, Mrs. A. H. Chapin, Jr., Mrs. J. D. Corbiere, Miss Margaret Blake, Miss Penelope Anderson and Miss Helen Jacobs.

The English nominees will be unusually strong this year, led in all probability by the brilliant Miss Betty Nuthall, who beat Mrs. Mallory so handily in June though the English girl is only sixteen and was still in pinafores when Mrs. Mallory won her first championship; Mrs. Kitty McKane Godfrey, Miss Joan Fray and Miss Evelyn Colyer.

Then will follow the women's national championships, scheduled for August 22 and played as usual at the Long Island stadium.

Finally the season will wind up in glory with the men's national championships from September 12 to 17, which promises to be the most exciting in years.

So the tennis fans are likely to see some good sport this year on the fast Forest Hills grounds, considered by many spectators the nearest to ideal in the United States.

It is the only tennis stadium in the world that is built of concrete and has accommodations for 13,000 spectators. The enclosure, approximately an oval, is 145 feet in width and 195 feet in length, with space for three courts and ample room around them.

For the comfort of the fans, as well as the players, hardly a speck of dust is allowed to float into the atmosphere. The grounds are rolled, manicured constantly and any loose earth is treated with calcium chloride to keep it from flying about.

This material is also used on the championship [illegible] courts to lay the dust and give a fast resilient surface for championship play.

CHEMISTS CREATE DUSTLESS TRACKS

Horses Run Under Ideal Conditions, Thanks to Science.

"TAKING the other horse's dust," a phrase immemorial in the racing world and running back to the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, seems destined to be obsolete soon, race goers say.

Gradual improvement in caring for the big metropolitan tracks near New York and Chicago, as well as others in various sections of the country, is responsible for the change.

Landscape gardeners have wrestled with the problem for years, not for the benefit of helping the "students of form" but for purely aesthetic reasons. Dustless race tracks, it was agreed, would add greatly to the comfort of the spectators for the best race finish in the world holds no thrills if only the judges can see it.

Today chemicals are freely used in keeping the dust from rising. Chemists had to find something that would not injure the horses' hoofs and at the same time permit thoroughbreds to use their maximum speed.

Calcium chloride, a chemical that absorbs many times its own weight of water, has been used for some years on the smaller tracks at county and state fairs and now is coming into wider employment on the larger tracks.

THIS AUTO PICKS UP ITS OWN ROAD DUST

English Idea Not Needed in This Country, However, Experts Say.

A MANCHESTER, England, engineer 15 years ago patented an apparatus to be used on automobiles which would collect its own dust.

As described by Church Howe, then American Consul at Manchester, the device drew the dust into funnel-shaped conduits which ran from the rear of the front wheels to the rear of the back wheels.

The dust was blown into a central box, either by air pressure of the moving automobiles or by a centrifugal fan geared to the driving shaft of the car.

Such an apparatus would have little success in America today, highway engineers point out. Recent improvements in road construction have eliminated the dust problem almost to the minimum in some sections and even old dirt roads may be modernized by applications of calcium chloride.

BACKYARDS GIVE JOY TO CHILDREN

TURN your backyard into a children's playground!

That is an idea growing rapidly in various sections of the United States and Canada.

One of the first to do that was George W. Perry, Director of Parks and Playgrounds, of Orange, N. J., who one year ago established a recreation center in the rear of his property.

So pleased was he with the success of the idea that he told others of it and today a well-established organization, called the Backyard Playground Association of America, is functioning with headquarters in New York City.

In hot weather the most popular part of the equipment is a garden hose which serves as a shower bath for the children.

Those playgrounds have been salvaged from dismal areas of tin cans and other rubbish. The janitor has been enlisted as groundkeeper and director of activities, and when he is of the alert type, he has worked to make the ground quite in keeping with the more ambitious recreation centers, rolling the earth or pounding it down firmly and spreading a thin layer of calcium chloride to keep down the dust.

In the congested districts of the larger cities, particularly in New York, the idea has caught on, the playground experts declare.

Lice and Mites Hurt Egg Yield

These Two Poultry Parasites Require Different Treatment to Kill.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Poultry parasites are of many kinds. Sometimes they multiply until they kill the fowls on which they prey. But in the opinion of entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture parasites do even greater injury to the industry by reducing the vitality, stunting the growth, and checking the egg yield of fowls. Lice and mites are the most frequent and widespread groups of eternal parasites, and these two require entirely different methods of treatment to rid the fowls of their attacks, because the two live under different conditions. The lice exist on the fowls, and the mites live in cracks and crevices in nests and roosts.

Eradicating Lice.

For eradicating lice the Department of Agriculture recommends application of sodium fluoride. It kills all varieties of lice—body, head, and feather. This chemical may be applied by dusting or by dipping. Either the "chemically pure" or the "commercial" grades may be used, but the latter is cheaper and more easily obtained. Young chicks require very little, and a pound of powder costing about 50 cents should kill the lice on a flock of 100 chickens. Dipping the fowls is still easier and cheaper, but it is not wise to dip fowls unless the weather is warm. A single treatment of every fowl, by either the dusting or dipping method, will completely eradicate all lice from the premises.

Destroying Mites.

For mites the procedure is utterly different. Mites do not live on the fowls by day, but come out and suck their fill of blood when the fowls are roosting. First the poultry house must be cleaned thoroughly. Trash, nesting material, etc., should be taken out and burned. Then go over the whole house thoroughly with crude petroleum or carbolineum, using either a spray pump or brush to apply the material. Petroleum is cheaper but the carbolineum gets into the cracks better and lasts longer. Paint the roosts and let the petroleum or carbolineum work into every crack. The mite killer should dry before the chickens go to roost.

There are other fowl parasites, such as the scaly leg mites, blue bugs, bedbugs, fleas, and chiggers, each of which may cause much loss; these pests, however, are not so generally distributed as are the lice and mites. This general distribution over the entire United States and the pernicious attacks of mites and lice make these two groups of outstanding importance.

Roup Usually Starts as a Cold During Winter

One of the common troubles with poultry in the fall and winter is a disease known as roup. It usually starts as a cold with a watery discharge from the eyes or nostrils. In this form, it is commonly called a cold. The trouble may be nothing more than a cold, in which case it will soon clear up and disappear.

If, however, roup is really present, the eyes—one or both—will swell and will be filled with a heavy mucus which may even be so thick it is cheesy. The bird will stand hunched up and will have no desire to do anything. There will be a foul odor from the discharge. This is roup.

Keeping the birds warm is one of the best treatments for this trouble. Take all birds thus affected to a warm building or room—if one is available with a stove in it, so much the better. Squeeze as much of the cheesy material from the eyes as possible and treat the eyes with a warm 5 per cent solution of boric acid or with a 2 per cent solution of some good disinfectant. A 20 per cent argyrol solution is also good for this. Remove any birds from the pen as soon as any other cases are discovered.

Short Farm Notes

No farm building is really complete until it is painted.

Man can live without milk, but not so well.

Nitrogen in the air is free but the only way that a farmer can gather it is through legumes.

Another step toward better profits is the reduction of the feed bill for rats, grain weevils, and other such "varmints."

The average annual rate of depreciation to allow on a miscellaneous lot of farm machinery usually is about 10 per cent of its inventory value of the preceding year.

Saw Much Difference in Log Structures

Cabin and log house are synonymous to most persons today, but in the early days of Ohio, when such structures were common for residence purposes, there was a nice distinction between the two, it is brought out in the journal of Thaddeus Mason Harris, a preacher of Dorchester, Mass., who, in search of health, traveled in the summer of 1803 from his home to Marietta, Ohio, and published a record of his travels. He wrote:

"The temporary buildings of the first settlers in the wilds are called cabins. They are built of unhewn logs, the interstices between which are stopped with rails, caulked with moss or straw, and daubed with mud. The roof is covered with a sort of thin staves split out of oak or ash, about four feet long and five inches wide, fastened on by heavy poles being laid on them.

"If the logs are hewed; if the interstices be stopped with stone and neatly plastered, and the roof composed of shingles nicely laid on, it is called a log house.

"A log house has glass windows and a chimney; a cabin has commonly no window at all and only a hole at the top for the smoke to escape."—Kansas City Times.

Many Requisites for Career of Medicine

Whoever is to acquire a competent knowledge of medicine ought to have the following advantages: a natural disposition; instruction; a favorable position for the study; early tuition; love of labor; leisure. First of all, a natural talent is required, for when Nature opposes, everything else is in vain; but when Nature leads the way to what is most excellent, instruction in the art takes place, which the student must appropriate to himself by reflection, early becoming a pupil in a place well adapted for instruction. He must also bring to the task a love of labor and perseverance, so that the instruction, taking root, may bring forth proper and abundant fruits. . . . Possessing these requisites to the study of medicine and having acquired a true knowledge of it, we shall thus in traveling through the cities be esteemed physicians not in name but in reality. But inexperience is a bad treasure . . . the nurse of timidity and audacity. For timidity betrays want of powers, and audacity a want of skill.—Hippocrates.

Totally Indifferent

He was a veteran actor, with an extremely indifferent outlook on life, appearing in a very good show but in a minor part.

"How's the play going?" asked a friend on meeting him.

"Pretty fair, I'm told," drawled the actor.

"What's it about?"

"Don't know."

"For heaven's sake," exclaimed the friend, "surely you've seen the thing, you're in on it?"

"No," returned the veteran of the boards. "Several times after the first act I've thought of going round to the front to see what it was all about, but somehow I've never quite got there."

Pearl in Every Book

There are people, it seems, who value things in proportion to the price that is put on them; and because the Bible can be bought for a few pence, or a few shillings, pass it by as a common thing. "Why should we buy your cheap little books?" scornfully asked a man in Burma. The colporteur replied: "Yes, they are cheap, only two pice a copy, but I have seen the people of Ceylon buying oysters at one pice, in the hope of finding a pearl. And here—there is a pearl in every book." It was a happy answer, and the colporteur spoke better than he knew, for the pearl is the best symbol of beauty born of pain.—Montreal Herald.

Stone Bathtubs

In Mexico and many of the Central American countries where the tropical heat makes the water in city mains too warm for pleasant bathing the people use a plan adopted hundreds of years ago in those regions. Bathtubs are cut from solid rock near a natural spring of pure water, or fed by a stream through bamboo pipes. These stone baths are near the homes of most of the wealthy citizens, and all hotels have them attached to their buildings. Travelers from Northern countries find these cool baths very refreshing.

Normandy Justice

Ernest Dowson, poet of tragic memory, when living at a Normandy village, got into a fight with a local baker and was arrested. A deputation of villagers went to the magistrate and pointed out that M Dowson was one of the most illustrious English poets.

"Quite right to remind me," said the magistrate. "I will imprison the baker, instead."

And he did.—Detroit News.

His Surprise

Little Audrey and her smaller cousin were playing in the garden when a clamor arose, and the lady went out to see what was wrong.

"Oh, mercy!" she cried as she reentered the residence. "Audrey has cut her cousin almost to pieces with your razor!"

Her brother-in-law laughed heartily because he had had no idea the razor was as sharp as that.—Kansas City Star.

Every Inch a Real Home Is This Colonial Type

KITCHEN
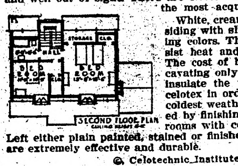
DINING ROOM
LIVING ROOM
SUN ROOM OR OPEN PORCH
FIRST FLOOR PLAN

A LIVING-ROOM forty feet long—that is practically what one has in this exceptionally well planned Colonial house. The living-room extends on one side into the dining-room, set off only by two small china closets, and on the other into the sunroom. The whole effect is one of spaciousness and hospitality.

Another outstanding feature is the downstairs bed-room, which can be used as sick-room, guest chamber, playroom or sewing room, as occasion arises. The stairways are compactly arranged and well out of sight. There are closets and storage space enough to please the most acquisitive housekeeper.



White, cream or grey paint may be used on the siding with shutters, trim and roof in harmonizing colors. The walls and roof are made to resist heat and cold by insulating with celotex. The cost of building may be kept down by excavating only half of the house, taking care to insulate the unexcavated half with a layer of celotex in order to heat the house easily in the coldest weather. A further saving may be effected by finishing off the walls of the second floor rooms with celotex instead of lath and plaster. Left either plain painted, stained or finished with a dainty stencil such walls are extremely effective and durable.

State Game Laws Govern Hunting in the Forests

Can anyone hunt and kill game in the national forests? This question is frequently asked Department of Agriculture officials. Hunting and fishing in all national forests, says the forest service, are governed by the game laws of the state in which the national forest is located. Most forest officers are deputy state game wardens and it is their duty to enforce the state game laws at all times.

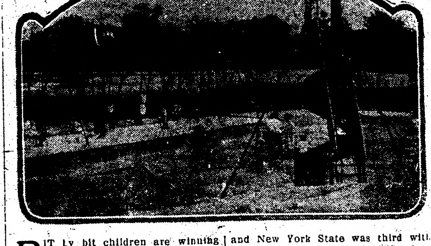
In some of the national forests, however, national game refuges have been set aside for the preservation of wild life. In these refuges hunting and fishing are not allowed, except under special circumstances and with the approval of the authorities in charge.

No More Leisure

Leisure is gone—gone where the spinning wheels are gone, and the pack horses, and the slow wagons, and the peddlers who brought bargains to the door on sunny afternoons. Ingenious philosophers tell you, perhaps, that the great work of the steam engine is to create leisure for mankind. Do not believe them; it only creates a vacuum for eager thought to rush in. Our idleness is eager now—eager for amusement; prone to excursion trains, art museums, periodical literature and exciting novels; prone even to scientific theorizing and cursory peeps through microscopes. Old Leisure was quite a different personage: he only read one newspaper, innocent of leaders, and was free from that periodicity of sensations which we call pastime.—George Eliot.

NEW RECORDS FOR PLAYGROUND USE IN NATION EXPECTED THIS YEAR

Over 1,000,000 Men, Women, Children in Attendance Represents Present Figure—Communities Report Increase Over 1926—New York Leads.



BIT by bit children are winning back for their use as playgrounds the land won from them in the last fifty years by the march of commercial progress.

Aided by various associations and individuals throughout the country, communities are setting aside more money each year to give children what the authorities call the children's birthright, according to data now being compiled to cover 1927.

More than 1,000,000 men, women and children every day found play and recreation on public playgrounds last year, according to the Playground and Recreation Association. That figure is expected to be exceeded greatly this year. In 758 cities the municipalities spent $19,202,123 for recreation purposes on 5600 outdoor playgrounds.

So far this year 790 towns and cities have reported recreational facilities at 19,123 centers, everyone supervised or directed in some fashion to give the greatest good to the greatest number.

For this year, New York State is in the lead with 1,416 recreation centers in 74 cities. Pennsylvania is second with 906 centers and Massachusetts third with 807 playgrounds.

California, however, spent more than any other state, with a total of $2,571,501. Illinois was second with $2,397,106 and New York State was third with $2,331,262. In New York City alone the expenditure was $939,263.

In the last ten years, it is estimated the number of public recreation centers has been multiplied by more than two and a half. The increase has been due in large measure to provision made by realty men for recreation centers in new sub-divisions.

Model playgrounds today include kindergarten, swings, slides, merry-go-rounds, pavilions, field houses, wading pools and, of course, an open play area where the larger children may romp to their hearts' content, with ball games, top matches and marble tournaments.

No grass could stand the punishment of hundreds of feet and the modern practice is to roll the ground firmly and bind the surface with some agent usually calcium chloride, which keeps the dust laid even in extremely dry weather.

Such playgrounds have an added value in keeping children off the streets, the experts assert, and thereby reduce the number of deaths from automobile accidents. Some cities, notably New York, have reported substantial gains in child-saving by this means.

No Way of Avoiding the "Madding Crowd"

We can never get people out of our eye. Wherever we go they are with us, great crowds of them. They have filled up the subway before we arrive. They have packed the elevated train before we get there. They have jammed every store before we decide to go shopping. If we go into a bank we are compelled to stand in line. If we want to buy a theater ticket we stand in line. If we want to buy a bunch of radishes we stand in line. No matter where we go there are a hundred people ahead of us. They swarm like the frogs and locusts of ancient Egypt. Egypt had ten plagues. We have only one, the plague of people.

We could get on better with them if they were not so close to us. They elbow us and jostle us and shove us and step on us. Even when we get them out of our eye they tarry in our ear. When we go into the inner chamber and shut the door, we cannot shut it tight enough to keep out the sounds of people. We hear them day and night. "Night" is only a poetic expression, for New York city is like the New Jerusalem. There is no night there. A Biblical writer informs us that once upon a time there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. No one has ever made such a statement about New York.—Rev. Charles E. Jefferson in the North American Review.

Only Five Holidays Universal in States

With all the many holidays which bless this country, it comes as a surprise to learn that there are actually only five days in the year which are celebrated everywhere in the United States and its possessions. These are New Year's day, Washington's birthday, the Fourth of July, Thanksgiving day and Christmas. The states have other holidays. The tally is interesting:

Labor day has the greatest popularity, being observed in 46 states; election day comes next with 43; Memorial day follows with 38; Columbus is honored by 35; Lincoln by 26, and Armistice day by 28. In the South the birthdays of Jefferson Davis and Robert E. Lee are still observed by 10 and 9 states, respectively, and 4 of the southern states celebrate April 26, the date of the surrender at Appomattox, as Confederate Memorial day.

Making Tidal Predictions

The machine used for predicting tides is termed "a mechanical prophet with brains of brass." This machine, which weighs about 2,500 pounds, is about 11 feet long, 2 feet wide and 6 feet high. It was conceived, designed and constructed in the office of the coast and geodetic survey and put in operation about 1910 and has been used continuously for tidal predictions by the government. This machine is designed to calculate simultaneously the 37 factors that go to make up the tide. These factors depend upon the relative position of the sun, moon and earth and also upon the shape and size of the harbor through which the predictions are made.

Diners Need Solitude

Of all esthetic human activities that of dining is most successfully and properly conducted in solitude. Those who miss appetite are suffering from a lack of concentration upon their viands. They have lost appreciation of aroma and of flavor by allowing competing sights and sounds to enter into the performance of a ceremony which should partake of religious austerity. If I ever set up as a physician I will send no nervous wreck through the horrible ordeal of sitting at some long table in a health farm and dining amid the clatter of the nascently red-blooded. — Heywood Broun, in Vanity Fair Magazine.

Famous Old Church

The Trinity church (Boston) corner stone was laid in 1734, as an outgrowth of King's chapel. The first building was of wood, 90 feet long and 60 feet broad, without any external ornament, neither tower, steeple nor window in the lower story of the front of the building. There were three entrances in front, with neither arch nor porch. The inside, in contrast with the exterior, was very handsome, the paintings and arches considered the finest in the city. It was supplanted by the granite structure in 1828, with a noble square tower. This was destroyed by fire in 1872 and rebuilt.

Overlooked One

Little Hester repeated to her mother the 23d Psalm.

When she had finished she said: "Oh, I forgot one verse—about spilling the milk."

Her mother was puzzled and curious.

Again she repeated the Psalm and coming to the words, "My cup runneth over," triumphantly exclaimed, "That's it! That's the one I forgot." —Vancouver Province.

A Bucket Full of Air!

Mr. —— was driving a party of friends recently, the air in one of the tires leaked out. Mr. —— had no pump in the automobile. Several persons in the automobile party offered a number of solutions to relieve the trouble. Finally Mrs. —— said:

"John, leave the automobile here and you walk to the filling station for the air!"

Crop Rotation Aids Beekeeper

Sweet Clover Termed One of Best and Most Reliable Plants for Honey.

Crop rotation and soil improvement programs, while not primarily intended to benefit the beekeeper, have nevertheless been very greatly to his advantage in Ohio, Virgil N. Argo, specialist in apiculture for Ohio State university, points out. One result of the progressive farming methods has been a very great increase in the Ohio acreage of sweet clover, which Argo characterizes as "one of the best and most reliable of all honey plants." The acreage of sweet clover in Ohio has increased in the last decade from about 100,000 acres to between 300,000 and 350,000 acres.

Honey-Producing Areas.

"Originally," Argo says, "there were two natural honey-producing areas in the state. Almost all the western half, covered with a glacial soil derived from limestone, supported the growth of clovers, and there were crops of alsike and white clover honey each year. In the northeastern corner of the state was the buckwheat section.

"Improved methods of agriculture have enlarged these nectar sources. In western Ohio there has been a remarkable increase in the use of sweet clover. It gives a honey of exceptionally fine flavor and appearance and yields nectar every year. In northeastern Ohio there has been an increase in the use of lime as a soil treatment, with more and more land planted to alsike and white clover. Even the buckwheat area of the state now produces heavy crops of clover honey when weather conditions are favorable.

Taste of Clover Honey.

"Sweet clover honey has a distinctive spicy taste not found in white clover and alsike honeys. Buckwheat honey, the darkest on the market in this country, has a very strong flavor and is preferred by some persons, but there is not such a market demand for it as for the clover honeys."

New Type Feed Grinders Becoming Very Popular

The last ten years has seen a very significant change in the design and construction of small feed grinders. In years gone by practically the only type which was available to the farmer was the burr type, which worked very satisfactorily and of which thousands were sold and put into successful use.

The new type, however, that is coming into use seems to be very popular. It is known as the hammer mill and differs from the burr mill in having swinging hammers which strike the material to be ground and crush it much as a baseball bat would crush an apple if it were swung at it. These hammers are mounted on a rotating cylinder and are rather numerous, so that not very much of the material gets away. The hammers are made of manganese steel, a very hard substance, strongly resistant to wear.

The degree of fineness to which material is ground is regulated by screens at the bottom through which the material can pass. So long as it is not fine enough to pass through the screens, it will be subjected to the action of the hammers until finally it is reduced to required fineness.

Easy to Capture Rats While They Are Young

Rats, like the poor, we have always with us, but it is at this season that they are generally thickest, owing to the 100 per cent results of their breeding. Fortunately, however, the adolescents among them can very nearly always be caught if only a regular campaign is undertaken against them. This is a good method:

Cut some corks up into pieces the size of small peas and fry the fragments well in bacon fat or lard. Dish out the result into a tin plate and leave this near the creatures' haunts (though don't let your household pets or chickens get at the stuff). The younger rats will eat greedily thereof and perish in consequence.

Hints for the Farm

Gulleys in an eroded field are the ear-marks of shiftless farming.

• • •

Cod liver oil fed to hens that are housed closely during winter helps keep up egg production.

• • •

Fifty cents' worth of acid phosphate added to a ton of manure makes it worth two tons of manure.

• • •

The successful farmer of today is the farmer who uses power successfully. One-mule farming is too inefficient to pay.

• • •

Best results are obtained when lime for alfalfa is applied before the seed is sowed if the soil is sour, for lime acts slowly.

• • •

Sweet clover may be seeded during the winter months when the soil is honeycombed from freezing and thawing. Under most conditions, it is best to seed the crop in the spring either alone or with oats as a nurse crop. When the crop is seeded during the winter, nonscarified seed should be used. For spring seeding the scarified seed is preferable.

In looking over the yearly list for 1926 I find the same four patrons at the top of the list this year but, the 5th one last year was at that time John Holst. The 5th one this year is S. H. Nohre. The first two on the list made a good increase over the previous year but 3 and 4 dropped off considerable. No. 5 made a gain of more than 500 pounds. When we stop to think back over the first six months of 1917, I claim our showing for the year is remarkable. How gloomy it looked and as much as the undersigned like to be optomistic, I confess that during the latter part of May and the month of June and beginning of July I would like to see that man that could say that everything is for the best and make you or himself believe it.

Everyone of us dreded the coming of winter. No feed sown as we all knew, hence we were positive that if any feed was to be had the farmers would have to buy it. The feed problem is at the end of the rope but the big question, in my mind is, how are we fixed for seed? If you have to get it have you found where you can get it and if it worth planting. You must remember that last year was a wet season and those that did raise some small grain did not get the best of quality. Oats and Barley is of a very poor quality and as much as I like to be a peptomist, that is one better than an optomist, I have a hunch that this is going to be a good year so what you do be sure you are planting grain that will germinate.

With Arno Steinhauer topping the list for the year, and year after year, it is only right that something be said about him. Every farmer deserves some credit and praise for his part in making this creamery a success, but no one will deny that the big producers deserve more than the lesser. Arno is a pioneer in this community, so is his wife, they built and moved onto their present farm in April 1917, eleven years ago. Considering the period that we went thru after the war and these last three year of unusual wet weather, I challenge most anyone to show a better record. When they moved onto their farm you could hardly find the house for brush and timber, today they have that same farm in a different condition. Most of the brush is gone, they have up-to-date barn, milk machine and fifteen Holstein cows, most of them good grades and they cull out the poor cows.

When people tell me there is no money in dairying I cannot help but think of Arno, and few more like him. Arno's cream check for 1927 was $2,253.13. He sold some no good cows for $149.66 and calves for $229.41 a total of $2,532.20. I say this is real money from his cows and if you ask Arno today what he figures his best investment as well as what saves him a lot of work, I am certain he will tell you that it is his new modern barn which is equipped with drinking cups and milking machine, he also has a good milk and separator room.

Not so long ago Arno's neighbors produced more butterfat than he did and he is glad to admit that they should have a lot credit for his success as well as others that have profited by their former experience. One of them is his nearest neighbor J. P. Augustine, who has been his nearest competitor for some time and for awhile last year it did not look as if Arno would hold first place for the year. If Augustine had not lost his two best cows last year he would have been 1st. We can't all be at the top of the list but it should be our aim from year to year to try and do more profitable dairying. By that I mean you should make it your business to find out how many of your cows are worth keeping and then give them the best of care and feeding which often results in more money from ten cows than you got from fifteen before. With this thought in mind and the same, or even better, cooperative spirit that prevailed last year there is no question about the growth of the local creamery and as the creamery grows so does the dairyman.

LESSON XVII

ALFALFA: A ton of good alfalfa hay is considered nearly equeal to a ton of bran for feeding dairy cows. A good stand of alfalfa yeilds an average of 3 tons of hay per acre (two cuttings). A hardy variety such as "Grimm" will last for several years in a soil suitable to its growth.

Throughout the central and western part of Minnesota, alfalfa can be easily grown; in fact, as easily grown as clover or timothy, with the exception that the seed needs inoculation when it is seeded on fields that have not had alfalfa in recent years. In the southeastern and northeastern sections of Minnesota the soil in most locations needs to be limed for alfalfa.

Alfalfa may be seeded from April to June. Barley is considered the best nurse crop. For a perfect stand, alfalfa is sometimes seeded alone but the field should be free from weeds. From 12 to 15 pounds of seed is used per acre. If the field is to stand for several years only pure "Grimm" seed should be used. Write University Farm, St. Paul, for bulletin on Alfalfa.

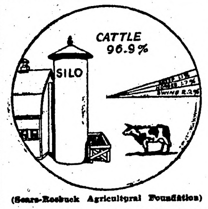
Eat Way Through Corn Acres



(Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation)

Eating their way through almost four million acres of canned corn in the form of silage is the job American cattle, mostly dairy cows, accomplish every year, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. It has been estimated that they eat 96.0% of the vast amount of silage while of the small amount left, swine consume 2.2%, horses, 1.7% and sheep 1.1%. Very little silage is fed to poultry. All silage made on the farm is consumed on the farm because it is not a product that can be handled successfully through commercial channels.

Great Northern Train To Change Schedule

It is reported that a radical change in our train service will probably take place next week. The south bound train will leave Warroad early in the morning and arrive in Holt a little past 8 o'clock. The same train will return from Crookston about two thirty in the afternoon. This schedule won't give us very good mail service, but will be less expensive for the railroad company and will give the people from north over five hours to spend here shopping and attending to other business.

Few Inside Jobs on Wall Street

Low-Salaried Employees Seldom Found Unfaithful to Their Trust.

New York.—"Inside jobs," as those operations are known which result in monetary loss to employers, are said to be rare in the financial district.

Detectives and others who are posted on the latest business developments in the underworld have great respect for the thousands of low-salaried employees, who, facing temptation daily in handling large sums of money, remain true to their trust. Further, they say, the workers remain faithful to their employers although approached frequently with apparently lucrative propositions by organized crooks "planning a job."

Human frailty, however, sometimes breaks down the guard even of the most faithful employees and the very crooks who can find no weakness of character play upon their vanity with some success. Illustrative of the manner in which modern psychology thus is adapted to the needs of the underworld is the recent loss of $17,000 in stocks and bonds.

Takes Advantage of Clerk.

A messenger shoved the securities under the ground glass window of a bank, said he would be back for a receipt and left to transact other business while the clerk was counting the lot. A few minutes later the clerk heard some one outside the window declare in no uncertain tones that he "couldn't wait all day."

"Give me my receipt now," he thundered, "or give me back my securities!"

"Oh, all right," retorted the clerk, peevishly, "if that's the way you feel about it, take the securities!"

He opened the window, glared at the supposed messenger and tossed the stocks and bonds on the counter. Out the door they went in the pockets of a stranger.

Sometimes the fault rests with too-trusting employers. Belated investigation into circumstances surrounding the loss of a check by a youthful messenger revealed that in various pockets he carried securities to be delivered for a half dozen firms. The lost check itself had been written in four figures and the total value of the paper was even larger. Yet none of the employing concerns knew more about the boy than his name and supposed address.

These cases are not unusual, Hugh D. Combs, general superintendent of claims for the United States Fidelity and Guaranty company, asserts. Upon his young shoulders rests much of the burden of recovering securities lost in just such ways and carelessness in handling valuable paper is one of his greatest worries.

Use Civil War Methods.

"Business men seem to be trusting anybody to deliver the millions of securities handled daily," he said, "and the messengers seem to be equally trusting. Some firms still are using Civil war methods of delivery. They were all right when trading amounted only to a few shares a day, but they are obsolete now.

"It banks would do away with ground glass delivery windows, so that clerks plainly can see those with whom they are dealing, and if messengers could be taught always to get a receipt before intrusting securities to others there would be fewer thefts and losses."

Lands Fish in Death Grip of Eel Under Ice

Saranac Lake, N. Y.—The most unusual fish story of the winter in the Adirondacks counties comes from Westport, where Edward Pearson, while fishing through the ice of Lake Champlain, caught a nine-pound pickerel, to the back of which was clinging a lamprey eel weighing a pound and a half.

Even after the big pickerel was flopping about on the ice the eel maintained its death grip on the fish, from which it was sucking blood. Pearson was forced to kill the eel before he could detach it.

While Lake Champlain fishermen have known that eels of that type inhabit the lake, the Westport case is said to be the first on record where a fish was caught having a lamprey fastened to it.

Book Is Upside Down When Read by Luther

Dighton, Mass.—Allen Morton Luther is a great reader, but he always holds his book upside down.

Ever since he was a lad in school, and Luther is now more than fifty years old, he has had this peculiarity combined with ability to read and spell backward.

Luther can read and spell in the conventional way, too, when occasion demands, but it seems that his ability to spell words both forward and backward has made him an uncommonly good speller.

Physiologists and psychologists have examined him and have come away puzzled. Theatrical people have tried to lure him onto the stage, but Luther prefers a quiet life and his work in the Fall River city hall.

Crochet? No! Woman Wants to Be Engineer

Joplin, Mo.—Hoping railroads some day will permit women to be locomotive engineers, Mrs. John J. Tolbeck is becoming thoroughly acquainted with lesser mechanical contrivances.

She is chief machinist in a Joplin machine shop. But her life ambition is to be a train woman. She advocates equal rights for women, not because of any political ambitions, but because she wants to sit in the right-hand cab window, a privilege now denied her sex.

"When the public finally realizes that a woman can operate an engine just as efficiently, if not more so, than a man, you'll find me at the throttle," she says.

Mrs. Tolbeck is sometimes summoned to the railroad shops here to assist in solving an intricate mechanical problem.

Dolls, candy and shop windows failed to interest Mrs. Tolbeck when as a youngster she was taken to town by her parents, who resided on a farm. The parents' Saturday afternoon shopping finished, they drove to the railroad roundhouse, where their daughter could be found watching the locomotive machinists.

Man's Gift Feeds Poor 118 Years After He Dies

Philadelphia.—Samuel Scotten died 118 years ago, but his spirit of charity goes marching on.

He left a fund and directed that the annual interest of $12 be used for the purchase of bread on his birthday to be distributed to the worthy poor.

On his last birthday the board of city trusts faithfully carried out the provisions of the will, which directs that "on the 23rd day of the second month ("that being my birthday) there be delivered to the poor of the city and of Southwark, $12 worth of bread, taking care that none but the needy get it and that not more than two loaves be delivered to any one family."

FUEL THAT IS WORTH $638,000,000 ANNUALLY WASTED IN THE U. S.

Motorists Careless in Taking Advantage of Progress Made by Engineers and Chemists.

Washington. — Gasolines are so much better than even they need be that motorists of the United States waste $638,000,000 worth of motor fuels annually. This conclusion is inescapable if the findings of federal government scientists—that the average car owner wastes from 20 to 50 per cent of his gasoline—are correct.

The United States bureau of mines and the bureau of standards do not translate the losses into actual monetary waste, but that figure is easily arrived at from a compilation of data available in federal government reports.

The fuel waste is attributed by the scientists of the government bureaus to two important factors, the primary one being, of course, that the average motor fuel today is superior in volatility even to the high standard set by the federal government for such gasolines.

Secondly, in spite of the fact that the motorist has read and heard much to this effect, he still does not realize that the modern fuel is so much better that he can use a greatly leaner carburetor mixture with satisfactory performance and infinitely greater economy.

"Lean out the carburetor" is a phrase that is almost as old as motordom itself. That probably explains, in large part, the lack of response to such advice in this period.

But, according to government experts, who have gone exhaustively into the subject, the last few years have seen such a change in the quality of gasoline that the old phrase has come back into being with a virility and vitality that, sooner or later, must have its effect in the form of enormously reduced car operation costs.

The average motor car consumes 454 gallons of gasoline yearly. If from 30 to 50 per cent of this is wasted, it means that, taking the lower figure, the average carburetor sees 126 gallons of gasoline pour through its jets for no useful purpose.

Broad-Shouldered Togs to Be Style This Spring

New York.—That athletic-looking American of a decade ago, with broad shoulders and a narrow hips, is about to return. The New York Custom Cutters' club at its annual style show at the Hotel Commodore displayed the newest creations in men's apparel, featuring broad chests, narrow hips, wide lapels, longer coats and wider and shorter leeves. Trousers, however, will hang straight with little change in width. The popular colors were gray and brown.

At Least, Minds Were on the Right Track

When men invade the realm of women in ladies' apparel shops often the scene resembles that created by the proverbial bull in the china shop. The clerks of one downtown store tell about two young men who desired to buy hosiery.

"What color?" asked one of the other in reply to the clerk's question. "Now, what color did she ask that we get?" And the pair grew quite perplexed.

"Oh, yes, I remember. We want that shade called buckshot."

"No, no, not buckshot was it?" questioned the other. "Wasn't it shotgun?"

"Now," queried the clerk helpfully, "do you mean you want gunmetal?"

"Yeh, that's it. Gunmetal. Gosh, we missed it a mile, but we were on the right track anyhow," the two replied in chorus, laughing at their own mistake.—Indianapolis News.

The Failure

Judge Molynoux of Minneapolis told at a luncheon a story about a brother judge.

"My confrere," he said, "was passing sentence on a criminal the other day and spoke of him as a professional burglar, but the man protested warmly from the dock.

"'Here, judge, yer honor,' he said. 'I don't know what yer drivin' at when ye call me a professional burglar. I've only burgled once before, and they nabbed me both times.'

"'Oh,' the judge answered suavely, 'I did not mean to say that you were eminent in your profession.'"

—16—

"Not always. Sometimes," she answered guardedly.

"I should think the schoolroom would be too dark for you to work there so late."

"I usually stop working before dark."

"But this evening?"

"I—lingered on—"

A brief silence.

"I must warn you, Miss Schwenckton, it's not really safe for you to be alone after dark either in your school room or on this lonely road."

"Then I'm thankful you're with me."

"But what detained you so late?"

"Oh — this and that — a bit of work—"

"Correcting spelling-papers, I presume?"

"Really, Mr. Creighton, your interest in perfectly unimportant, trivial things like spelling-papers! My—goodness!"

"I'll bet you never bore yourself with correcting spelling-papers! Not you!"

"How you came by the impression that I'm so light-minded as never to correct spelling-papers! Well, to be sure, it isn't my favorite pastime. I do sometimes indulge in other diversions."

No use—he could not trap her into admitting that she had been working in her schoolroom, but walking on the highway. Why didn't she want to admit it?

"Oh!" he exclaimed as at this instant she tripped over a rough place in the dark road and, to his consternation, fell headlong. "Are you hurt?" he solicitously inquired in alarm as he lifted her and she leaned against him panting.

"No, no. Don't you know, Mr. Creighton," she asked, as she moved out from the circle of his arm, "how dangerous it is to lift a fallen woman? "What a h—l of a road!" she remarked as they resumed their walk cautiously, his hand under her arm to guide her.

"There are just two kinds of girls," said Marvin, "that would talk about 'a h—l of a road'—high-born ladies and toughs! As a country teacher and pious Sam Schwenckton's relative, you don't come under either of these heads. What must I conclude?"

"That I ~~adapt my speech~~ to my company. When I'm with—Cousin Sam—my speech is Yea and Nay."

"If it were more than that I'm sure he would not harbor you—if for no other reason than for your corrupting influence on his children. You're not afraid he might have your school taken from you?"

"He would if he thought it was his duty to," she nodded, her tone expressing supreme indifference to this fate so dreaded of the county teachers.

"You wouldn't mind that—losing your school?" he asked curiously.

"It would be hard on the school. They'd not get another teacher like me in a hurry!" she smiled.

"I can well believe you!"

"I've always thought people that don't know me miss a lot!"

"I'm sure I've gained a lot in knowing you!"

"Thanks. Same to you. And if I were dismissed," she added with a sigh, "all the elegant education I'm getting in textbook lore would be brought to an untimely end! I'm learning a lot through teaching—from geography up."

"Up? Up to what?"

"Oh, the multiplication tables up to twelve. I never knew them so well beyond seven."

"Then for the sake of your education, I hope Sam Schwenckton doesn't find out what he's harboring in his family! But really, Miss Schwenckton," added Marvin earnestly, a solicitous note in his voice, "I'm afraid that with the sort of trustees we have in this district a teacher like you can't hold down this job long! I'd hate like the dickens to have your bigoted old trustees fire you, so let me warn you—do be a bit prudent—if it's in you to be! I've been hearing complaints—"

"Of me?"

"—from the parents. A small boy in your school, Jakey Raffensburger, roused his parents' suspicions by being so enamored of school since you've taught it, when heretofore he had to be flogged to make him go, that they were moved to investigate the reason and he admitted, after much probing, that he'd rather go to school to you than see a movie, because you told them about 'devils,' showed them pictures of devils and acted the devil for them! Satan, it seems, has become to Jakey a hero, to the unspeakable horror of his devout parents, who, believe me, take the devil seriously! They complained to me that they didn't send their child to school to learn to love and admire the devil! So I interviewed Jake and found you'd been telling these children of scenes from 'Paradise Lost'!"

"A little English poetry surely can't be objected to, Mr. Creighton?"

"It's not in the curriculum, Miss Schwenckton! Stick to the curriculum just enough to hold your job, can't you?"

"But do you know I couldn't endure my job a week if I didn't liven it up with a little of the joy of life!"

"Joy of life—'Paradise Lost'? You'll be brightening their lives with Dante's 'Inferno' next! By the way," he suddenly remembered, "you're booked for a talk to the district teachers at their monthly meeting next Saturday, aren't you?"

"Gawd help me, yes! Ain't it awful!"

"What are you going to give them? How to teach geography, I suppose?"

"I could even get away with that in the frock I'm going to wear! The softest, most alluring French blue georgette!" she said enthusiastically. "Anything I say will be well received in that garb! I'm trying to collect suitable shoes and hat to go with the frock, seeing the hard-boiled shoes and hat I'd just invested in, before I'd dreamed of buying this dainty frock, would be a thought too harsh. If I'd only known," she lamented, "that I was going to buy that luscious georgette, I'd have bought entirely different shoes and hat! Isn't it tragic they don't match?" she wailed.

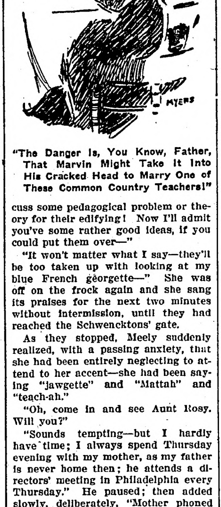
"Good Lord, are you confusing a teachers' institute with a fashion show? I asked you what you're going to talk about to those teachers?"

"What would you advise?" she asked confidingly.

"Do you mean to say you haven't anything ready and the meeting booked for day after tomorrow?"

"I don't know any of the teachers, so I don't know their tastes."

"'Tastes'! Do you think you're expected to treat them to a vaudeville stunt? You're supposed, child, to discuss some pedagogical problem or theory for their edifying! Now I'll admit you've some rather good ideas, if you could put them over—"



"The Danger Is, You Know, Father, That Marvin Might Take It Into His Cracked Head to Marry One of These Common Country Teachers!"

"It won't matter what I say—they'll be too taken up with looking at my blue French georgette—" She was off on the frock again and she sang its praises for the next two minutes without intermission, until they had reached the Schwencktons' gate.

As they stopped, Meely suddenly realized, with a passing anxiety, that she had been entirely neglecting to attend to her accent—she had been saying "jawgette" and "Mattah" and "teach-ah."

"Oh, come in and see Aunt Rosy. Will you?"

"Sounds tempting—but I hardly have time; I always spend Thursday evening with my mother, as my father is never home then; he attends a directors' meeting in Philadelphia every Thursday." He paused; then added slowly, deliberately, "Mother phoned me she particularly wanted to see me this evening, as she'd found an old photograph I'd asked her to look for—also, that she'd got some interesting mail from England—"

He paused again tentatively. Meely held herself rigid that he might not detect the tremor that went over her at his words.

"Good night," he said abruptly—and before she quite realized he was going, he had disappeared in the dimness of the road.

* * * * * * *

St. Croix Creighton and his father, dining at the Ritz-Carlton in Philadelphia, were discussing a certain matter not at all connected with the business of the directors' meeting which they had come to the city to attend.

If the infatuated eyes of Nettie Schwenckton could have beheld St. Croix just now—his evening clothes making him look taller, more slender, more than ever like the young god of her romantic air castles, she would indeed have thought her "honor" a small price to pay for any least notice such a divine creature might bestow upon her. Little did that enamored maiden dream that at that very moment her name was on the sacred lips of her demi-god, her image in his thought.

St. Croix, in his desperation that afternoon, after Meely's amazing rebuff, determined, on his way to his car, that he would pique her into a regard for him by exciting her jealousy; she herself had given him the hint when she had explained her silence about the teacher's boarding with them. He would make love to that school teacher under her very eyes! Meely should be made to see how other girls in her station, or in any station, for that matter, jumped at his nod!

And then he had seen, as he supposed, the school teacher in his brother's company; coming out of her schoolhouse hours after the closing time, apparently in a relation with him of the utmost friendliness. This was the third time in ten days that he had seen Marvin come out of that schoolhouse! His official duties certainly did not take him there so often as that. St. Croix was genuinely worried over the circumstance, as well as irritated at being foiled in his plan to make Meely jealous of the teacher, which of course he could not do if Marvin were intrigued with her.

Over their cigarettes and coffee St. Croix was shifting his own apprehensions about his brother on to his father's broad shoulders.

"The danger is, you know, Father, that Marvin might take it into his cracked head to marry one of these common country teachers! If he happened to fall in love with one of them, her station or breeding wouldn't stop him!"

"Her station wouldn't. Her breeding would. Marvin's fastidious."

"Within limits," St. Croix doubtfully admitted.

"Bad breeding would be a limit for him."

"I wouldn't trust him! He'd be just fool enough to think he could raise her to his level. You know what he is—all for leveling and equalizing!"

"I ought to know what he is! I've suffered enough from what he is!" Mr. Creighton said bitterly. "Takes after his mother. Never got his crazy radical slant from me!"

"Mother's not radical."

"She's tolerant. Tolerant of anything!"

"Much too tolerant of Marvin's freakishness!" St. Croix grumbled.

"Yes, if she'd only stand squarely with me about the boy—" Mr. Creighton paused and shook his gray head. "No—no use. What good has it done, my taking the extreme stand I have?—even ordering my own son out of my house!" he exclaimed, a pained look in his eyes that made St. Croix, who was fond of his father, curse his brother in his heart. "I thought he'd come back cured in a month at most! But what does he do? Gets himself a good job and goes to work! More confirmed than ever in his wrongheadedness! I'm seriously thinking of asking him to come home again. Might as well. He'll never change. And it makes your mother so unhappy—his being away!"

"And the d—d gossip it makes!" St. Croix frowned.

Scarlet Uniform Not Conspicuous in Field

The writers of American school histories have frequently taken occasion to remark scornfully upon the scarlet uniform worn by the British regulars in the campaigns against the Indians during Colonial days, but, as a matter of fact, the scarlet coat of the Briton was a less conspicuous uniform than the blue subsequently adopted for the army of the United States.

Careful experiments have brought out the fact that light gray, such as that worn by the West Point cadets, is the color first lost to sight in the field. Scarlet comes next, with dark gray, blue and green in the order named. In target practice it has been found that of all colors scarlet is most difficult to hit. Light green is almost invisible under the violet tinge of electric lights, and would, therefore, be an excellent color for the uniforms of naval scouts who would be exposed to the rays of an enemy's searchlights.

Penny Theft Puts Man in Prison for Five Years

New York.—For stealing a one-cent memorandum book from the pocket of Cyril Lee, a carpenter, on October 11, 1923, George Crawford, colored, was sentenced to five years in Sing Sing by County Judge Frank F. Adel.

Crawford has a criminal record and the theft was at night, resulting in a charge of grand larceny.

MOTHER AT GATE FOR SON'S BODY

Freed by Death After Thirty Years in Prison.

San Francisco, Calif.—Old Bill Son got out of San Quentin the other day.

Bill had spent 30 of the last 37 years behind the walls of the "big house" across the bay.

He was freed by the only pardon they could give him—death. He died in the prison hospital, a broken old man of fifty-five years. That may not be old to those who can live with friends, sunshine and flowers, but it is very, very old for a man who has had only seven years of freedom since his eighteenth birthday.

And when they took Bill out the big gate, where he had seen so many thousands enter and leave, there was only one person there to meet him. It was his mother.

"Bill never was a bad boy—just a little wild," she told Warden James Holohan. She plans to bury him in Oakland, where she now lives. The warden did not give her name.

William D. Son first went to San Quentin in 1890. He had been sentenced for assault, and after serving a year and a half they let him go back to Mendocino county, from whence he came. In 1898 he went back from Butte county to serve a term for the murder of his mining partner. They let him out in 1900, but a year later he was back as a parole violator.

In his younger days Son was known as the "strong man of San Quentin," and tales of his strength are told by the old-timers. He was proud of his strength, too, and showed it to his mates in the jute mill, where he worked many years, by lifting huge bundles of hemp and cord. But prison routine sapped his strength.

His 30-year prison record was without a blemish. A "model prisoner" they called him, but that's all the good it did him. He had no friends on the "outside" pulling for him and no one to believe in him except his mother, and she, unaided, couldn't do anything to sway prison boards to clemency for a "three time loser."

"He was in here so long I guess the world just forgot him," said the warden. "All the world, that is, except his mother."

Howling Ghost Found to Be Horn in Sheet

Atlantic City, N. J.—Tuckahoe residents recently ran to earth "the wailing banshee of Cedar swamp."

Preceded by bloodhounds and armed to the teeth, the trail led them to the game preserve of Peter J. Peterson of North Wildwood.

Cautiously they entered, expecting at any minute to encounter the weird creature, said by hunters to roam the swamp breathing fire and emitting unearthly howls.

But all the search revealed was a sheet smeared with phosphorus and a foghorn.

Peterson identified the "props." He said the only way he could keep hunters off his place was by reincarnating the famous "Jersey Devil." So he donned the sheet and Bill Wheeler, his gamekeeper, manipulated the foghorn. Then hunters dropped rifles, bags, hats and coats all over the premises getting out of the vicinity.

Drops Book on His Toe, It Leads Her to Altar

London.—When Miss Edna Ruth Flack, a history student at King's college, dropped a book on the toe of Dr. John Wesley Bready, American historian, in the British museum reading room, she did not realize that it was an "overt" act which would lead her to the altar.

Miss Flack was so embarrassed over the incident that Doctor Bready stopped to talk to her about her studies in an effort to put her at her ease. They met frequently after that until in a little tearoom back of the museum Miss Flack lost her shyness and they discovered they had quite a good deal in common. They were married at the City temple.

Doctor Bready, a graduate of Columbia university and Union Theological seminary, is the author of "Lord Shaftesbury and Social Industrial Progress."

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

Article Twenty-Eight.

The Grand Coup

THIS is a play which sometimes becomes possible at a declared trump and if recognized in time its performance will gain a trick for declarer. The essentials of such a situation are: A major and a minor tenace in trumps—one in junior's hand and the other held by declarer—and one more trump in declarer's hand than in junior's. Played in the ordinary manner this holding would force the lead into declarer's hand on the eleventh trick and compel him to lead away from his tenace up to junior's, which would give junior one trick if he held the minor tenace, or two tricks if his tenace were the major.

If, however, declarer held one less trump—that is—no more than junior and if the lead could be placed in dummy for the twelfth trick junior would lose one if he held the major tenace or he would lose both if he held the minor tenace. It thus resolves itself into a question of getting rid of a trump and this may often be done by trumping a good card of dummy's. Of course a re-entry card in dummy is also necessary so that the situation must be recognized several tricks in advance and the play planned for it.

Here is a deal to illustrate it:

	N
	♠—K, Q, 9, 4 ♡—10, 2 ◇—K, 5, 4 ♣—A, K, Q, J
♠—7, 3, 2 ♡—5, 3 ◇—A, J, 9, 8 ♣—10, 8, 5, 4	W E	♠—10, 5 ♡—K, J, 7, 4 ◇—10, 6, 2 ♣—9, 7, 3, 2
	♠—A, J, 8, 6 ♡—A, Q, 9, 8, 6 ◇—Q, 7, 3 ♣—6
	S

North deals and bids one no trump and East passes. South has two good reasons for changing the bid to hearts: First, he has a good original heart bid; second, he has a worthless singleton. Therefore he bids two hearts. West passes and North considers changing back to two no trump. If he had no hearts or only one he would have done so; but his holding (10, 2) is so near normal expectancy that he passes, and South becomes the declarer to play two hearts.

West has a very poor hand from which to make an original lead. The Ace-Jack combination, like the Ace-Queen, is the very least desirable opening, because if he waits for that suit to be led up to him he is much more likely to be able to get two tricks from it. He therefore leads the four of clubs. Dummy is placed on the table with the trumps at the right and declarer takes a moment to consider his play. He must lose one trick to the Ace of diamonds and he may lose one heart, but otherwise it promises to be a very easy hand to play.

The play follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	C4	CJ	C2	C6
2	H3	H10	H4	H6
3	H5	H2	H7	H8
4	DA	D4	D2	D3
5	S7	SK	S5	S6
6	C5	CA	C3	H9
7	S2	S4	S10	SA
8	D8	D5	D6	DQ
9	D9	DK	D10	D7
10	C8	CK	C7	S8
11	C10	CQ	C9	SJ
12	S3	SQ	HJ	HQ
13	DJ	S9	HK	HA

Declarer wins a small slam.

At trick 2 declarer leads dummy's ten of hearts so as to take the double finesse and retain the lead in dummy if it is successful. After trick 3 declarer sees that junior holds the King and Jack of trumps and he recognizes the Grand Coup situation. He must plan to get rid of his nine of trumps and then place dummy in the lead for the twelfth trick. He leads diamonds at trick 4 because this Ace must be drawn out as soon as possible. At trick 6 he trumps dummy's Ace of clubs and then takes his Ace of spades. He cannot continue spades because East has played the ten and probably has no more and he must not be allowed a chance to use one of his trumps. Declarer takes his diamonds next on tricks 8 and 9 and then leads the good clubs from dummy and discards his two spades on them. At trick 12 it makes no difference which of his trumps East plays. Declarer captures them both and makes a small slam.

Foot Note: The term major and minor tenace are used here because it makes the explanation so much simpler. However, the trumps need not be Ace-Queen and King-Jack, but declarer's last two must each be higher than one of junior's.

Killed by Own Order

In the Civil war siege at Yorktown, Capt. A. R. Wood had posted his last picket and left him with this order:

"Shoot the first man who approaches from the direction of the rebels, without waiting for the countersign."

It was dark and the officer, after leaving the picket, lost his way, wandering away from his lines instead of toward them. He soon discovered his mistake and turned back. He approached the soldier to whom he had given the order. In the shadow the faithful private saw a dark figure stealing towards him and, without hesitation, raised his gun and fired. The captain was shot in the side and the wound proved fatal.—Kansas City Star.

Royalty Likes Eggplant

King George has shown a liking for fried egg plant, which is seemingly shared by others of the royal family. The BABY
Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?
If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.
Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.
The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

SICK WOMAN SOON RECOVERS

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A neighbor advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which she said had helped her so much. So I bought a few bottles and tried it out. It sure helped me wonderfully. I felt much better. My work was no longer a dread to me. If I hear of any one who is troubled the way I was, I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to them and I will answer any letters in regard to the same."—Mrs. Bertha Meachan, 1134 N. Penn. Ave., Lansing, Mich.

"I had been sickly ever since I was fifteen years old. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I got so I could do all my housework and I am in good health."—Mrs. Marie K. Williams, Ketchikan, Alaska.

From Michigan to Alaska, from Maine to Oregon and from Connecticut to California letters are continually being written by grateful women recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Compound is made from roots and herbs and for more than fifty years has been helping to restore run-down, over-worked women to health.

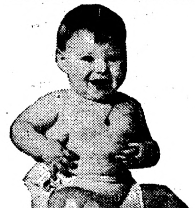
Awful Threat!

Betty and her mother had been quarreling.

"Boo, hoo!" Betty cried finally, "if you treat me like this, mother, I'll go home to hubby!"



The BABY

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

FOUND SOUTH SEAS NO DOMESTIC IDYL

Prospective English Countess Kept Early Hours.

London.—Housekeeping in the South Sea islands requires a great deal of hustling and energy, says Lady Hastings, who has just returned from the island of Morrea, where she went two years ago as a bride. The day begins at six o'clock, with breakfast at seven.

She is the daughter of an Italian marquis, and when she settled down in her new home she had never been in a kitchen more than a few moments at a time. Her husband, heir to the earl of Huntington, ran a plantation there.

"Our coral house in the South seas sounds so idyllic that it might be the creation of some ultraromantic imagination," said Lady Hastings.

"Such a mundane word as 'housekeeping' probably never enters one's mind in connection with it. Yet keep house I did, while my husband supervised the work outdoors."

The Hastings' had two Chinese and a Polynesian servant.

"The only difficulty about catering was that as the boat crossed from Tahiti only twice a week the commissariat had to be planned a week ahead. One boat took the orders and the next delivered them. From civilized Tahiti I ordered fresh meat on ice, New Zealand butter and canned fruits and vegetables."

Regarding the daily routine Lady Hastings said:

"In that climate, tempered by trade winds from the sea, no afternoon siesta interrupted our round of work and sailing and swimming, excepting in January and February, when the lassitude from the combined effects of heavy rain and heat had to be slept off every afternoon."

1927 "Fairly Good" for Farmers, Says Report

Washington.—Agriculture, as sized up by government experts, had a "fairly good" year in the chief producing regions with the exception of the central and eastern part of the corn and hog region.

The Department of Agriculture in its final report of the agricultural situation for the year said 1927 brought a measure of recovery to the cotton belt, but much of the central and eastern sections of the corn and hog region had a poor crop of corn, which, coupled with a slump in hog prices, left the past season a disappointing one.

"The swine industry," said the department, "was hit last spring by a market slump, especially in the European market, and continued throughout the season on a level of prices somewhat below the two previous years. The other live-stock industries have fared relatively well. All told, 1927 was a year of well-balanced production. It brought the price level of farm products last fall up near that of two years ago, which was the highest since 1920.

"The total value of about fifty crops in 1927, based on December 1 prices, is estimated at $8,428,626,000, compared to $7,793,480,000 for the same crops in 1926, an increase of $635,146,000."

West Canada Farmers Plant, 7,500,000 Trees

Indian Head, Sask., Canada.—Nearly 7,500,000 of broadleaf tree seedlings and cuttings were planted in 1927 by 11,000 prairie farmers, thus setting a new mark for tree planting in western Canada.

The development of shelter belts in the Canadian west is being followed to a considerable extent by the setting out of apple and small fruit orchards, gardens of fine vegetables and of shrubs, flower beds and lawns. To insure success in the establishment of shelter belts, helpful control is exercised by the department of interior forest service stations at Sutherland and Indian Head. From spring until the coming of winter each year a corps of field inspectors travel continuously, inspecting proposed new plantations, advising farmers and taking note of the effect of the plantations on the social and economic life of the settler.

In the last 26 years the government has distributed over 95,000,000 trees to farmers in the prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Gold Nuggets in Turkey Start Search for Lode

Red Lodge, Mont.—Discovery of gold nuggets in a turkey prepared for Christmas dinner by Mrs. A. Pollard has started prospectors on a search for the mother lode.

Eight nuggets, weighing 30 grams and valued at about $3, were found in the turkey. The fowl was raised on the Paul W. Cartright ranch, two miles from Red Lodge. Red Lodge is in the district where placer miners obtained millions of dollars' worth of dust in pioneer western days.

MOON RAISES HIGHER TIDES THAN THE SUN

Distance Is Chief Factor in Reducing Sol's Pull.

Washington.—"Although the moon is the chief factor in creating tides, the sun also makes itself felt noticeably in piling up the ocean's waters," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"But the sun is tremendously greater than the moon—more than 27,000,000 times as large; why does it play a subordinate part to the little moon in tide production?

"Distance is one answer, but it is not the whole answer. If the sun were as close to the earth as the moon is it would pull the earth and its waters some 27,000,000 times as hard as the moon does. But since distance is such a great reducer of gravitation the sun's pull on the earth is roughly only 183 times that of the moon.

"But the question persists, why does the moon produce the higher tides when the sun pulls on the earth 183 times as strongly?

"The total pull of a body on another, and its tide-producing force are not the same. The tide on the earth results from the difference between the pulls on the center of the earth and on the near and far sides. These are the pulls that tend to separate the waters and the earth, and therefore to pile the waters up. And it will be seen on close thought that two weak forces that are considerably different, operating one on the earth and one on the waters, can cause a greater separation than two very strong forces that are nearly equal.

Weakened by Distance.

"Light and gravitation act somewhat alike in that each grows weaker as the source of light or gravitational pull is moved farther and farther away, and that both grow weaker very rapidly—in proportion to the distance of the source multiplied by itself. The differences in gravitational pull on which tides depend can be visualized, therefore, by an experiment with light.

"Turn on an electric desk light or other single bulb and hold near it a sheet of ordinary white paper. Hold the paper with one edge toward the light and only two or three inches away and turn it very slightly so that the light shines along the sheet and illuminates its whole surface. There will be a noticeable difference between the brightness of the light at a point near the close edge and at a point near the far edge.

"Now hold the paper in the same way at a distance of ten or twelve feet from an even brighter light, or hold it in the daytime at such a distance from a bright window. You know that there is still a difference in the degree of illumination of the two sides, but it is so very tiny that you cannot detect it.

"The two points on which the sun pulls to make the near tide—the surface of the ocean nearest the moon and the earth's center—are 4,000 miles apart, and this 4,000 miles is a tiny fraction of the earth-sun distance, a little over four-one hundred thousandths. In the case of the moon this same 4,000 miles is a relatively large fraction of the earth-moon distance—1,666 one hundred thousandths.

"When all the values for distance and mass are inserted in the rather formidable equations for the pulls of the moon at the center of the earth and at the surface, and for the pulls of the sun at these two points, it works out that the difference in the moon's pulls are roughly 2¼ times the difference in the sun's pulls. The moon, therefore, exerts 2¼ times the tide-producing power exerted by the sun.

What Makes Highest Tides.

"Most of the time the sun and moon are pulling in different directions. But twice each month they pull in the same line. It is then that our coasts have their highest tides.

"Theoretically every star and planet and satellite in the universe raises its separate tide in our oceans. Actually, however, even Jupiter, the greatest of our sister planets, is so far away and relatively so small, that its influence cannot be detected. To all intents, therefore, it may be said that only the moon and the sun, our nearest and our most powerful neighbors in space, have a share in making the earth's tides."

Young Frenchmen Are Found Unfit for Army

Paris.—More than half the young Frenchmen called to do their 18 months' government military service are found unfit. The proportion of rejected men has been growing each year since the war.

Before the war, when the young conscripts did three and even four years' service in the army, only about one man in ten was relieved of duty. Many of these, examined later, were accepted for office duty.

About one-third of the young men are refused as physically below par when they appear at the age of twenty. About a sixth are sent home during their first three months' service, the hard life of the army and the manual labor or exercise developing defects previously undetected.

GRIEF OF MOTHER STARTS INDUSTRY

Takes Up Weaving and Town Is Now Famous.

Beiriz, Portugal.—A broken-hearted mother is responsible for bringing an entirely new industry to this remote village of the Douro province.

Four years ago the young wife of a well-to-do farmer here lost her only child. To take her thoughts away from her grief she took up carpet-making. Her nimble fingers worked so fast in their race to keep ahead of her sad thoughts that she became quite proficient and finally took on six apprentices to help her.

The carpets they produced were so successful that the industry expanded and their little home workshop has become a factory with 300 women employees, besides scores of others employed in minor jobs and training for admission in a second factory which will open soon.

The harmonious, delicate coloring and the intricate patterns of the Beiriz carpets already has made them well known in other countries.

The wool used in their fabrication is obtained from the flocks of the Portuguese Serras. All raw material is Portuguese, so that the industry is a genuinely national one.

The carpet industry is bringing prosperity to districts surrounding Beiriz. The women who a few years ago worked all day in the fields with their menfolk for a precarious livelihood now live in comfort at home employed in weaving and spinning the wool for the carpets at the factories, which sell as fast as they are made.

Grandmother Proud of Work in Night School

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Mrs. Mollie Kaplan could not understand what the fuss was about, and her dark eyes snapped with mystification and a trace of anger. She was a grandmother, yes, with 13 grandchildren, and she was probably the only grandmother, sixty years old, attending the public evening schools in the city of New York. What of it?

"Me? Too old? Why, I learn just as well as when I was younger," she said. To prove it, she drew forth a black notebook and showed the long English words she had written there.

Mrs. Kaplan came to American from Poland about a year ago. First of all, she says, she went to the synagogue and after a while she sought out a public school. She has never seen a moving picture, but she may, sometime.

According to Ignus O. Hornstein, principal of evening school 150, and Miss Clara Komoroff, Mrs. Kaplan's teacher, there is no more conscientious student in the evening school than the grandmother who three nights a week trudges up three flights of stairs and seats herself up in the front row of the classroom, pencil in hand and notebook in readiness.

Wives' Modernity Still Wins French Divorces

Paris.—Modern woman's mannishness has not yet swept all Frenchmen off their feet.

In Paris a merchant charged his wife with "cutting her hair like a boy, smoking like a chimney and driving like a chauffeur," and convinced the divorce court that he was right to object.

At Montbrison one of the old school got a divorce because his wife, who enjoyed riding a motor cycle astride, clothed in "baggy breeches," refused to cease these practices, which "injured his standing as an insurance agent. He took the precaution of having officials serve a summons on her to get her back into skirts and to establish that she refused to do so.

Legion of Honor Is Expensive to France

Paris.—Every red ribbon of the Legion of Honor costs the French government 500 francs, or $20, a year.

There are about 120,000 members of the order, so the expense runs above 60,000,000 francs.

Every member pays for his insignia, but there are archives and records to be kept, a permanent governing body to be maintained and several schools to be operated for children of members.

Pensions are attached to only a small proportion of the honors conferred for distinguished service, and each year there are fewer such awards.

Shaw's "Double" Is Soap-Box Orator

London. — George Bernard Shaw has a double who is a soap-box orator.

For some months before Shaw moved from Adelphi terrace to Whitehall court the tall, gray-bearded man who so greatly resembles the famous novelist was frequently seen in the vicinity of Shaw's flat on the Thames embankment. Now he has appeared near Whitehall court, often mounting his street-corner rostrum to address men and women who think they are listening to Bernard Shaw himself.

Lloyd George has several doubles in London, as have even the prince of Wales and Queen Mary.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

THE GREATEST WONDERS

IF YOU had lived in the ancient times you would have journeyed, if you had had the time and money, to seven places on the shores of the eastern part of the Mediterranean in order that you might see the then Seven Wonders of the World.

You have doubtless heard them named many times. It is probable, too, that if you are past thirty you would have some trouble in repeating them offhand.

To save you the time of looking them up, they were the Pharos of Alexandria, the Colossus of Rhodes, the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, the Hanging Gardens of Babylon, the Pyramids, the Tomb of Mausolus and the Great Statue of Jupiter at Olympia.

Go to some library and look up the reasons why each one of these was built. There are interesting romances and excellent and entertaining reading about every one of these creations.

After you have done that sit down and write out what you think are the most marvelous results of genius.

So that you may have a good starting point we print below the selections of a thousand men of note in this country and Europe who were invited to make a similar list. Every man voted for the seven things he thought most wonderful and when the ballots were counted these were selected, receiving the greatest number of votes in the order named: Radio, the telephone, the airplane, radium, spectrum analysis, the X-ray, the Panama canal.

These are indeed great wonders, but are they the greatest?

Poe in one of his poems refers to "the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome." A good many people delight to think that the world is going to the bow-wows, that the past is infinitely superior to the present and that they would have been much happier if they could have lived in another age and a better time.

A day's deprivation of modern conveniences of which the ancients knew nothing would be a good lesson for them. They would realize that this is, after all, a pretty good world to live in, that genius was never so active nor so productive, that every day sees its creations and its advancements and that we are far ahead of the ancients in the sources of happiness.

And now to go back to the beginning, what are the Seven Wonders of the modern world?

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

WHILE the fresh maple sugar is still toothsome, try using it and the sirup in various ways. Here are two:

Nut Sandwiches.

Brown walnuts in a little butter, season with salt and add to grated maple sugar. Chop the nuts and use on buttered whole wheat bread.

A most delicious omelet may be prepared by placing a half-cupful or less of blanched almonds in a buttered omelet pan, and stir until hot, but not brown; then pour in the omelet and cook. Fold as usual and serve with a hot maple sauce poured around the omelet. This makes a delicious dessert.

Golden Frozen Pudding.

Scald a pint of milk. Beat six egg yolks until thick, add one cupful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt; beat again. Cook the two mixtures until smooth, cool, add a tablespoonful of vanilla and one and one-half cupfuls of cream. Freeze. Have ready one and one-half cupfuls of sultana raisins, candied cherries, pineapple and citron mixed, cover with lemon juice and let stand overnight. Stir this fruit mixture into the frozen custard and let stand for two hours to ripen. serve with whipped cream.

Apple Cocktail.

Peel large apples and with a large potato scoop cut into small balls. Drop the balls into water with a bit of lemon juice to keep them from discoloring. Prepare a mixture of pineapple, banana, grapefruit and put into glasses. Decorate the top of each with a few apple balls. Pour over all a boiled cider slightly thickened by boiling—cool before using.

Carrot and Pineapple.

Granted carrot mixed with finely cut pineapple served on lettuce with a good mayonnaise is another good combination.

Salmon, coconut and celery with a good boiled dressing, using the fat from the salmon in making the dressing is another well-liked salad. Serve on lettuce and garnish with a spoonful of mayonnaise, sprinkled with minced chives.

THE NICEST MOTHER

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

A LOT of mothers may be fine,
I know that none's as nice as mine
Though some folks say,
"All children do,"
I know a way
To prove it's true,
A way to prove, of all the rest,
That my own mother is the best.

For often Mother takes me out
Where other mothers are about.
They call my name,
They pat my head,
They say the same
Things Mother said,
But not a one I ever meet
That ever makes it sound as sweet.

And when they kiss me once or twice
It doesn't seem the least bit nice.
I want to run,
That's really true,
It's just no fun
When some folks do,
But when my mother kisses me
It's just as nice as nice can be.

I've even had to eat their cake;
It's not as nice as she can make.
Just lots of ways,
And lots of things,
The way she plays,
The way she sings,
My mother's best. Besides, last night,
My daddy told me I was right.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

THE "BOGIE MAN"

THE great fear of children is the "bogie man," and many grown-ups have bogies of various forms. The word has an interesting derivation, having had its origin in Wales, that land of myths and elves of old.

"Bogie" is really a corruption of "bogle," which is derived from the Welsh "bogwl," meaning a specter or goblin. The verb "boggle," which means to waver or hesitate, to manifest alarm, also enters into the story of our bogie man. For in Wales a horse that shies in fear of something is called a "boggle."

So although we do not "boggle" or show signs of being "possessed," though we fear no goblins or witches, we do have our bogies today, pet fears and superstitions that are different merely in their nature from those old-time counterparts whose name has survived in the modern word "bogie."

* * *

I have a body and can't make it over; no one can make it over for me. If we should all give our best efforts to changing natural rules governing our bodies, and contribute liberally to our means, we couldn't do it. I learn from old books and from old men that the ancients had the same experiences I am having, and that they had the same bodies we have today. I know I may adopt health suggestions made by my grandmother, and repeated by simple and intelligent people ever since, with prompt and unmistakable benefit. These suggestions are known to everyone, cost nothing, and are effective without doubt; anyone may test them, and receive benefit—not in the distant future, but within the day of trial. Under such circumstances, why do we drag around with feeble bodies? Why are we poor when there is plenty in the world for us?

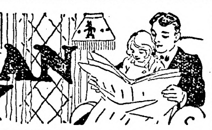
The SANDMAN STORY



ABOUT FAIRY QUEEN

"I'VE had a fine journey," said the Fairy Queen, as she came back to Fairyland.

"Tell us about it, and tell us what you saw," the Fairies asked.

"First of all, I saw some lovely trees along a great avenue. They had all come out in full, and they were leaning over and meeting high in the center, and talking to each other.

"It seemed that they had started telling each other little springtime secrets early in the spring, and had gone closer together and closer together as they had listened to each other.

"I've Had a Fine Journey," Said the Fairy Queen.

"So now the lovely branches met and made a beautiful tree archway all down the avenue.

"All winter long they had looked at each other on either side of the roadway and they had said:

"'When spring comes we'll have some talks!'

"Then I peeped in at a birthday party. A little girl named Lucy was nine years old.

"She had some other children at her party, and they played all kinds of games. Puss in the Corner was one favorite.

"They played the donkey game, too. There was a big sheet, and upon it was a painted donkey. Each child was blindfolded, and after having been turned around three times so as to be mixed up and to make the game harder, she was started off carrying a painted tail made of cloth which she was going to try to put on the donkey.

"The one who got nearest in putting on the tail correctly won a prize.

"Then they had ice cream and a large birthday cake with Lucy's name and age printed in pink letters upon the white frosting.

"The table had a paper tablecloth upon it with all kinds of pretty pictures of little Boy Blue blowing his horn and of children with sand pails and shovels at the sea-shore. The napkins were like the tablecloth, too.

"Then there were fences made of cardboard with the same patterns, and these fences were put about the table. They were quite low.

"The colors were all blue and yellow, and Lucy wore a yellow hair ribbon, and yellow socks, and a blue sash.

"Oh, they had a splendid time.

"Then I passed a great many members of the balloon family, all riding on motor cars. They looked very pretty and gay, and they were very proud as they waved a 'hello' to me as they hurried by!

"I saw some dear little pink leaves coming out, and I knew the members of the White Oak family were slowly coming along.

"I called upon a little Dicky bird, too, who belonged to a little boy known to his friends as Pine.

"Pine was very proud of Dicky and told how Dicky would sing, though really Dicky sang very little.

"But even his chirping was music and song to Pine's ears. And Pine told me of Dicky's bath-taking, and how he never failed to take a bath each morning.

"Oh, Pine boasted of Dicky, and of his bright yellow feathers.

"Pine thought it was so wonderful that Dicky did everything standing on his legs.

"'He sleeps that way, he eats that way, he sings that way, he takes his bath that way,' Pine said.

"I saw many garden flowers—lavender tulips, and white lilacs, and lilies of the valley, and Johnny Jump-Ups, and Striped Grass and Flowering Almond bushes, and they all wished me such a polite good-day.

"Flowers have such sweet manners. I saw two dogs rub noses, too, and tell each other they were so glad to meet again.

"My journey was interesting to me because I love to see all the different creatures and flowers and people I can.

"To me there is so much that is worth while to see, and it's all so very enjoyable," the Fairy Queen ended as she waved her wand happily.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

KNOWLEDGE OR WISDOM?

COMMON sense is a rare virtue. Good horse sense is worth more than rubies. The lack of it has proven disastrous to many educated persons. Education is an essential factor in the business world. It is also a necessity. The product of education is knowledge, but the discreet use of knowledge is wisdom—a gift of the gods!

Many a well-educated person fails in life for the reason that he does not know how to use the education he possesses. The more we know the worse fools we are capable of becoming. Education, when not directed into proper channels, runs riot with things. Many of the criminals, whose crimes have attracted public attention, possessed college degrees. It is not how much one knows that evaluates ability. It is how one uses what he knows. Little education and much wisdom is far better as an economic asset than a college degree and no common sense.

Dynamite in the hands of a child is a dangerous thing. So is education when not controlled by wisdom.

Wisdom is the product of experience. Knowledge is acquired from the schoolroom. Wisdom is within the grasp of every person; knowledge, the privilege of the smaller group.

"How much better is it to get wisdom than gold! and is understanding rather to be chosen than silver!" "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom."

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

ORIGIN OF BEARS

HERE is a superstition which, according to the American Folk-Lore society, is found in the Far Northeast. Perhaps the same story, or something very like it, is told in other sections of the country; very likely so for its origin lies deep in ancient mythology. The story is as follows: An old tramp-woman came to a house where there were two little children and, their parents being away, she put the children into the oven and baked them. When the parents came home and opened the oven door the children ran out in the shape of two little bears. Which accounts for the plantigrade feet of bears. The myths of Isis and of Demeter are evidently responsible for this superstition, incidents in the lives of each of these goddesses having in the course of some thousands of years suffered slight changes and adaptations.

Isis in her wanderings in search of the body of Osiris, came to the house of a certain king disguised as "a poor tramp-woman" and was engaged as nurse for the king's son. Every day, when alone with the child, Isis used to put him in the fire with the intention of gradually burning away his mortal parts and enduing him with immortality. One day the king came home and caught her at it, stopped the proceedings and the child thus lost his chances of entire immortality, remaining half mortal and half a god.

In the same way Demeter, searching for her daughter Persephone, came as a "poor tramp-woman" to the house of the king of Eleusis and being given shelter was caught one day by the king baking his child in the fire with the intention of thus conferring upon it immortality. The ancestresses of the poor tramp-woman of the first story are apparent. The bear part of the story is suggested by the plantigrade feet of that animal which so strongly resemble the feet of a man. As in the cases of Demeter and Isis the baking of the children was not complete, the children were left in the anomolous condition of the children experimented upon by the "poor tramp-women" of the myths.

In some jobs the collars have to be white; and in others, they have to be clean, also.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

"HABIT-FORMING JOBS"

DOCTORS are continually advising men "not to be slaves to their jobs," yet most of the men who have done anything worth while have been almost addicted to their work as drug users are addicted to the narcotics they use.

With the drug user the narcotic is the chief thing in life.

If he seeks to forget it, the thought of it returns to him.

If he tries to break off its use, he becomes instantly nervous and unhappy.

Now it may be that work ought not to have effect on human beings, yet that it does act thus is apparent to anyone who has associated much with men of affairs.

I know of a painter who was told that he was a slave to his art, and that he was getting morose and unfit for human companionship because he put it before anything else in his life.

Finally persuaded that this was true, he locked up his studio and went away for what was to be a two months' rest.

In a week he was back, painting busily again.

Nothing else was able to interest him in the least.

I believe that the average person needs rest and change, and that constant pegging away at the same task, however fascinating it may be, is narrowing, and exerts a bad effect on the health.

Yet most people could get more interested in their jobs than they are, without running the risk of illness, or without sacrificing any of the real pleasures of life.

If you will read of the scientists, who have been the very greatest of all benefactors of society, you will find that they did little else but investigate and experiment, and that they had no satisfaction in the lives they lived outside their laboratories.

The same thing is true of inventors, and of men who have built up great industries.

It is not the love of money that makes great organizations so much as the love of building, and of developing. That keeps many men hard at work long after they have gathered more money than they and their heirs can possibly spend.

I do not think that anyone should work at his job till he breaks down, but I do believe that few of us work anywhere nearly as hard as we can at ours, and that is probably the reason that work never gets to be a habit with us.

SHE HAS NO FEAR OF NITROGLYCERIN

Woman Hauls It to Fire-Fighting Husband.

Amarillo, Texas.—Her husband's dangerous vocation is shared by Mrs. Tex Thornton, wife of the man who puts out fires in the oil fields by tossing nitroglycerin into the flames. But she finds no thrill in it.

It is Mrs. Thornton's job to haul nitroglycerin to her husband. Recently she drove an automobile 800 miles over rough roads, carrying 1,500 quarts of the explosive. Scores of motorists who saw Mrs. Thornton approaching abandoned their automobiles and scurried across the prairie. But she insisted there was "nothing to make a fuss about."

Mrs. Thornton had to change tires five times before she delivered the nitroglycerin to her husband, who was fighting a costly gas fire at Corpus Christi.

"My work is just colorless routine," she remarked after the perilous trip. "Tex has all the fun, and I envy him. His work really is dangerous, and he accomplishes something. My bit is incidental and anybody could do it."

Thornton's "fun" consists of donning an asbestos suit, crawling to the edge of a fire crater and hurling 50 to 100 quarts of nitroglycerin into the flames. If several blasts fail to extinguish the fire, he digs deeper into his bag of tricks and gets water and steam to help him.

Mrs. Thornton also takes care of the storage of the family stock of nitroglycerin. While she does not dread the explosive, she does fear the mice and snakes which she finds in the storehouse.

Since their marriage five years ago Mrs. Thornton has been helping Tex fight the fires. Her hobby is airplanes, and she longs for the day when her husband can buy her one.

Man-Made Earthquakes Aid Railroad Builders

Leningrad, U. S. S. R.—Man-made earthquakes, recorded some distance away upon a simple form of seismograph weighing only a few pounds, are helping Russian engineers to survey the site of the proposed Turkestan-Siberia railroad.

The method is to detonate charges of explosives underground and to record the travel of vibrations through the ground in different directions. By a minute study of the records so obtained it is possible to secure data on the geological formation of the locality.

The new seismograph invented by Prof. Paul M. Nikiforov, director of the Physico-Mathematical institute of the Russian Academy of Science at Leningrad, is similar to one recently invented in the United States by Dr. John A. Anderson of the Mount Wilson observatory in California. Its main part, the pendulum, is a small vertical cylinder of pure gold suspended a little off center on a pair of fine wires.

Whenever there is any vibration the cylinder turns slightly in proportion to strength of the shock. A tiny mirror attached to the pendulum reflects a beam of light on a constantly advancing sheet of photographic paper. Every turn of the cylinder, no matter how small, shifts the light spot considerably and it traces a wavy black line. Several of the new instruments are now installed at earthquake stations in Turkestan and Crimea and give complete satisfaction.

Rock Deflects Drills, Oil Engineer Finds

Tulsa, Okla.—Because of deflection of oil-boring tools in underground strata, it is a wise oil man who actually knows where and at what level his well hits production, H. P. Bowen, Tulsa oil engineer, believes.

Bowen says flatly that no drill hole is vertical, and points to the recent instance of two offset wells coming together at a depth of 2,100 feet as proof.

He has worked out a deflection table which shows that a 6,000-foot hole that strays 25 degrees from perpendicular ends up almost half a mile from its surface location, and actually is only 5,433 feet deep.

"As a rule a rotary hole shows the greater amount of deflection," Bowen says. "It has been reported that a 6,200-foot rotary hole of the Roxana Petroleum corporation, on being surveyed, showed a deflection of 25 degrees from perpendicular. Actually, then, it was only about 5,600 feet deep."

Britons Must Import 3,700,000,000 Eggs a Year

London.—Great Britain consumes 5,700,000,000 eggs a year, and native fowls produce only 2,000,000,000 eggs.

Forty-seven per cent of Britain's imported eggs come from countries outside the British empire. The sum of money spent for these eggs exceeds the value of all the motor cars, motorcycles, cycles and rubber tires which Britain exports, and the imperial economic council wants something done about it.

English hens are now laying 100 eggs each annually as against 72 eggs in the pre-war period, but their eggs are smaller. Denmark and China are the chief sources of Britain's imported eggs. It is suggested by the economic council that home-laid eggs should be identified in such a manner that the public may give them preference.

THOUSANDS SEEK AID OF NEW MIRACLE MAN

Sleepy Mexican Hamlet Suddenly Becomes Famous.

Monterey, Mexico.—From a sleepy, obscure hamlet of less than 200 people, Espinazo, far removed from a railroad, on the border line of the states of Nuevo Leon and Coahuila, has suddenly sprung into national fame. More than 10,000 people are living in tents and camping in the open around the town, all drawn there by the mysterious performances of Nino Fidencio, who is looked upon as a miraculous healer of all ailments of body and mind.

The excitement over his so-called divine power in the treatment of diseases has not only spread to all parts of northeastern Mexico but it has penetrated the Rio Grande border district of Texas. Pilgrims by the thousands arrive daily in all sorts of conveyances and on foot at this strange Mecca where they clamor to gain an audience with the lowly peon Fidencio, that he may relieve them of their physical or mental burdens and sufferings.

Rich, Poor Seek Aid.

Rich and poor seek his aid. It is not unusual for whole families to wend their way to Espinazo in slow-moving ox carts, and swiftly passing them along the rough, worn road are men, women, and children in limousines and other high-priced automobiles, some of them coming from Monterey and other of the larger and more distant cities of the country. So large has the crowd become and with hundreds augmenting it daily that President Plutarco Elias Calles has been appealed to to take cognizance of the situation with a view of remedying perilous health conditions that the thousands of afflicted people who have gathered in Espinazo have brought about.

Gov. Aaron Saenz of Nuevo Leon and Gen. J. A. Almazan, commander of the military zone of that part of Mexico, have gone to the town and conferred with Fidencio with regard to the situation. It is declared that an epidemic of contagious diseases of various kinds is threatened among the pilgrims. Several hundred lepers are reported to be among the afflicted persons who have sought relief at the hands of Fidencio. Many smallpox cases have been carried into his presence. The death roll among the faithful believers of the healer's power has been so great that a cemetery was laid out in the town recently, and it is already filled with the dead.

Branded as Charlatan.

Comparatively little seems to be known about Nino Fidencio. He is thirty years old and first made his appearance in the little ranch village about three months ago. Among the employees of the ranch were several who were afflicted with paralysis, blindness, and other chronic disorders. Fidencio called these sufferers together and informed them that he would cure them of their ailments. At this seance he went through the performance of boiling various kinds of wild herbs in a great cauldron and then, while he chanted in a mysterious way, he threw a pailful of the brew upon the patients, telling them that they were healed. Strange to say, they were apparently cured of their diseases. The news of his apparently miraculous power spread quickly and he became the center of interest of the people for miles around.

The public health department of Mexico has pronounced him a charlatan, but the government authorities hesitate to prohibit him from carrying on his healing practices for fear that to do so would cause an uprising on the part of the thousands who believe in him. To keep order in the town a large force of federal troops is now located there.

Spinster Wills $650,000 to Her Chauffeur

Pottsville, Pa.—The will of a fifty-five-year-old spinster, filed here for probate, left an estate of more than $650,000 to her forty-year-old chauffeur and lifelong friend. James F. Currens, who is the only beneficiary under the will of Miss Ermina C. Eissler, who died recently, also is sole trustee of the fortune.

Currens had been in Miss Eissler's employ for many years.

47 Generations Rest in His Family Tombs

Ada-Bazaar, Turkey.—Rechid Safet Bey, deputy to the national assembly, claims that he has the largest collection of ancestors in the world. In two mausoleums, one at Sivas and one at Ada-Bazaar, he can put his hands on the caskets of his forebears in an unbroken line of 47 generations.

The family of Safet Bey was started in Turkey when one of his forebears migrated into Anatolia from Turkestan 450 years before the Turks, who were to found the Ottoman empire, swept in under the leadership of Orhan. Before they joined with the Ottoman lords, the ancestors of Safet Bey fought against them side by side with the crusaders.

Each generation has produced a writer worthy of mention in histories of Turkish literature.

CLING TO CUSTOMS OF CENTURIES AGO

Tyrolese Recall Memories of Hannibal's Campaigns.

Hazleton, Pa.—The congregation of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, which holds the distinction of being the first Tyrolese organization of its kind to be formed in America and which, with intense national pride, styles itself Tyrolese even though the Trentino now is part of Italy, has just dedicated a handsome chapel at its parish cemetery. Made of marble and perched on the slope that commands the burial grounds, the building makes an impressive appearance when viewed from the Hazleton-Allentown-Philadelphia State highway.

The celebration of All Souls' day at the cemetery also is a possibility now that this consecrated structure has been put into use and this arrangement is considered quite desirable. The building also will be used for services at times that this stormy section of the state makes outdoor conditions intolerable and grave digging sometimes out of the question. Services can be held at the chapel and the burial can be effected later.

Rev. Lewis Lucchi is the pastor of the congregation of Our Lady of Mount Carmel and has a devoted flock. To the student of history, when he meets and knows the Tyrolese, comes a light on the accounts of Hannibal's campaigns, with their story of aid given the Carthagenian in his campaigns against Rome. The auxiliaries came from the hills, where the inveterate enemies of the republic lived.

Among the Tyrolese are found names like Annabale, which is Hannibal with the "H" missing. Amalcare also is to be found, and the name of the favorite general of Hannibal, Hamilcar, is recalled. Alacure is encountered, and Alaric's name thus is found preserved in a people's traditions, after the expiration of many centuries. Naturally, the Tyrolese who kept their national entity in those days of the Roman empire wish to keep it still and they are not disposed to accept the designation of Italian citizens, if unnaturalized, but still call themselves Tyrolese.

Day Steals From Night, but It's Slow Pilfering

London.—Old Grandmother Earth is getting just a little teeny-weeny bit more sunshine in her life as Old Father Time clicks off the revolving centuries. It isn't a great deal, in the sunshine and daylight measurements as reckoned by puny man, but in her time it may amount to quite a lot.

Sir Frank Dyson, astronomer-royal at Greenwich observatory, has calculated that the days are lengthening at the rate of something like one section in every thousand centuries.

In a lecture on "The Observation of the Solar Eclipse," Sir Frank explained how the eclipse in Nineveh in 753 B. C., enabled astronomers to discover that the speed of the rotation of the earth was gradually being reduced.

Halley's calculations of the eclipse in Nineveh showed that that city should have been some hundreds of miles outside the zone of observation. To make his calculation fit the facts, he suggested that the month was getting longer, and subsequent work had shown that the movement of the tides was lengthening the day by a thousandth part of a second each century.

Find Ancient Tracks Across Grand Canyon

Washington.—New finds of fossil footprints in the rocks of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, but this time on the north rim, 14 miles from the site of previous discoveries on the south rim, are reported by Dr. Charles W. Gilmore of the United States National museum and Glenn F. Sturdevant, government naturalist of Grand Canyon National park.

Slabs bearing the foot imprints of small reptiles or salamanderlike amphibians were found at two levels, one in the Coconino and one in the Supai formation. These correspond with two of the three formations on the other side of the canyon in which tracks have been found during the last few years, but further exploration and examination of specimens will have to be carried on before it can be determined whether the levels match up exactly and whether the tracks represent the same kinds of feet.

The fossil footprints from the south side of the canyon thus far discovered represent 36 species, distributed among 28 genera.

Wife Shaves Man as Husband Talks Politics

Paris.—Francois Abert, who was senator from the Vienne department and minister of education in a recent cabinet, is preparing his candidacy for the April general elections. His opponent is a Socialist and a barber. M. Albert called on him the other day while the barber was shaving a customer.

"Glad to see you, Monsieur Albert," said he, "of course we have lots of things to talk about."

Then he called to his wife who was in the kitchen:

"Marie, come out here and finish this customer."

Marie dropped her preparations for the evening meal, grabbed the brush and the razor and shaved the customer while her husband and the other candidate talked politics.

KATE RENDERED FIRST AID

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

KATE ARUNDALE stood on the platform of the small station looking after the departing train from which she had just alighted. What a fool she had been to leave civilization—the safe comfortable civilization to which she had been accustomed all her life—to come West to marry her brother's friend, Aaron Ward. For, after all, what did she really know about Aaron Ward save that he was her brother's friend and partner in the big ranch? And as for her brother Joe, he was almost a stranger, too. Joe had left home for the West when Kate was sixteen, and had been home only once since, and that was last year when he came East to help settle up their father's estate. Joe was thirty-eight and had not married. While Aaron was twenty-six, two years older than Kate.

Joe Arundale had been a teacher in an Eastern college until he had developed some trouble with his lungs and had been advised by his physicians to seek the broad open spaces of the Western prairie. On the train going West Joe had fallen in with Aaron Ward and his mother, who were returning from the East where they had been to bury Aaron's father. A close friendship sprang up between the older man and the boy, and after Mrs. Ward's death, which occurred soon after, Joe bought a half interest in the ranch and the two men had lived together now for several years.

Through Joe's influence Aaron and Kate had carried on a correspondence which had resulted in Aaron's going East to see Kate. A mutual liking had resulted from the visit, and thus this trip of Kate's which promised to end in marriage, or had until utter homesickness had overtaken her, and caused her to wish heartily she had not been so hasty in making this trip West. To add to her misery the train had been held up the night befor and Kate had been obliged to give up her money and some precious keepsakes of jewelry which had belonged to her mother. Of course she had been no worse off than the other passengers had been, but the heartache, added to the long days on the train and the recent parting with old friends in her home town, had cast a shadow so deep that it seemed impossible for anything ever to lighten it.

As the train rushed on out of sight she turned expecting, of course, to find either her brother or Aaron waiting for her. But there was no one except the tall station agent who stood gravely regarding her, from under shaggy eyebrows.

"Left to set?" he inquired in a drowsy drawl.

Kate stared at him without understanding.

He gave her a friendly smile and spat at a lizard which was ambling across the platform out of the shade.

"There'll be some one along pretty soon. Joe told me you wuz coming. Like as not his pesky car had broke down. For myself I ain't got no use for cars; a horse always wuz and always will be safer to my notion. But come in. Don't stand out there trying to absorb all the sunshine. If you stay round here long you will find it can't be done."

Kate entered the small station and sank gratefully down on the long bench just inside the door. The shade was welcome after the blinding sunlight outside.

About an hour later the station agent came back from a final look out over the prairie and announced that: "That thar bus of Joe's is coming." And a moment later Joe drove his car alongside the station platform. He rushed in and caught his sister in his arms. The greeting on his part was all that might be expected from a man hungry for the sight of some of his own people. But with Kate it was different; she was more reserved, for she was clinging desperately to her determination to return East as soon as she could decently get away.

"I had to come alone Kate," Joe said apologetically as they set forth. "The sheriff came for Aaron early this morning to go after cattle thieves. He had no choice in the matter but to go. We have been having altogether too much rustling round here lately and the ranchmen got together last week and determined to put a stop to it. I don't know when they will be back from the raid."

They jolted on in silence for some miles, each busy with his own thoughts.

Suddenly Joe turned and looked at Kate and at the look of dumb misery in the girl's eyes he said:

"I know all about it, Kate. This is too big a change for you. I—we should have known better than to ask it of you. Aaron is a good fellow and I am sure he will not hold you to any promise you have made. If you want to go back you shall go tomorrow. There is a train leaves here at noon. I will see that you make it."

It was as if he had read her mind! Kate stared at her brother almost with unbelief.

"You are kind Joe," she murmured with trembling lips. "I'm sure no one could be kinder. Of course I am acting outrageously, but—but, oh, I can't explain to you!"

"Don't try, sister," Joe said. "Just let it all go. Try to rest all you can until I get you to a place where you can really rest."

Joe, though apparently absorbed in his driving, was in reality going over and over his disappointment and living in advance the heartache of Aaron when he had to tell the boy of Kate's decision.

Presently they came to the bank of a creek where cottonwoods grew. A swift turn brought a house in view, a long adobe building with cool looking porches and deep set windows peeping through vines.

Kate gasped.

"Why, Joe!" She stammered. "You never told me your home was anything like this! I had no idea—why, there are trees and flowers!"

"Adobe makes a mighty cool house," Joe answered, as he stopped the car and lifted his sister out. "But what does this mean?" he hastily added, as he caught sight of a long wagon to which were hitched a pair of mustangs which was tied to a tree in the yard.

Just then the door opened and a man came out of the house with his hat in his hand.

"We've been waiting for you, Joe," he said. "Thought you'd be getting back about now. We got in a brush with those rustlers down in Deep canyon and Aaron stopped a bullet. He's pretty badly shot up. We've sent for a doctor, but what he needs most till the doctor gets here is somebody who knows how to cleanse a wound and stop the bleeding. Needless to say we got the rustlers and the sheriff is taking them into town."

Kate waited to hear no more. Aaron hurt and needing help changed the whole current of her thoughts. Forgotten for the time was her weariness. She entered the house, closely followed by her brother and the two men.

The next hour was one of the busiest of Kate's life. At sundown when the doctor came he found Aaron as comfortable as first aid could make him. He complimented Kate on her work and made no secret of the fact that had she not been on hand there would have been little use for his services. He seemed to take it for granted that Kate would continue to be the nurse and left directions for her to carry out.

A month later Aaron had so far recovered as to be practically out of danger and Joe and he could do very well alone. Joe took Kate aside and told her that if she wanted to return East he would see that the way was provided for her.

"And leave Aaron and you?" asked Kate in astonishment. "Why, I wouldn't think of such a thing. Why, Joe, I love you and the ranch and—and—"

But she got no further because Joe took her in his arms and led her to where Aaron was sitting dejectedly in the shade of the big cottonwood.

"Cheer up, lad," Joe said as Aaron looked up at their approach. "Kate has something to say which I think you will be glad to hear." Then he turned away and left the two alone together.

Plans to Reproduce Temple of Solomon

In a lecture at the Roerich museum, Harvey Wiley Corbett, architect, outlined an elaborate scheme for a facsimile reproduction of the Temple of Solomon, with all the outlying buildings of the citadel, to be used for exposition purposes, according to the New York Herald-Tribune. If his plan is carried out a 47-acre plot of land will be surrounded with high walls, on the inside of which the landscape around Jerusalem will be painted. Once inside, the visitors, with gowns thrown over their clothing, will walk like new Solomons in all their glory through streets lined with magnificent buildings, passing the massive edifice in which the captain of the host was quartered with his guard, the queen's palace in its flamboyant Assyrian style and brilliantly colored faience, the palace of King Solomon, the Forest of Lebanon palace with its endless rows of fluted columns, to the very temple itself, soaring into the air in a blaze of faience and white marble.

This architect's dream to turn back time 3,000 years is so carefully worked out in every detail that it could be built, according to Mr. Corbett, in six or seven months. The plan is the result of years of research and study by Mr. Corbett, Dr. John W. Kelcher and others. To demonstrate the feasibility of his idea the architect produced working plans, models, drawings and paintings of every phase of the gigantic undertaking. One can see how every detail of the temple itself, for instance, will look when completed, from its entrance to the Holy of Holies guarded by cherubim.

Mr. Corbett described briefly how the plans were formulated by carefully working out in actual model form of all the minute specifications for the temple given in the Bible. Doctor Kelcher first constructed the separate pieces on a reduced scale, following the Bible measurements, and found they assembled perfectly. All the literature on the subject was studied, the topography of the ground and every possible site. When all the knowledge available had been gathered, the plans were worked out architecturally so as to make the reconstruction a feasible undertaking.

HOW TO GROW BETTER OATS

By T. R. Stanton, Agronomist in charge of oat investigations, Office of Cereal Crops and Diseases, Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Best Soils for Oats

THE soils of the Corn Belt generally are well adapted to oats. Soil productivity in this area is less important for oat culture than proper cultivation and handling. The land must be well drained. On wet, undrained soils oats may be injured by plant diseases. On the other hand, oats require more water to produce a pound of dry matter than any other cereal. The crop, therefore, should be grown on land that naturally retains moisture. Loam soils usually produce better oats than the more sandy ones.

Oats In The Rotation

A DESIRABLE rotation for oats is one that includes both tilled and legume crops. Oats are quite adaptable, and rotations usually are arranged to meet the needs of other crops, rather than those of oats. Winter wheat can not be sown where corn remains standing in the field until freezing weather before harvesting. As a result, spring-sown oats follow the corn crop with better adjustment of labor and time. They also fill requirements as a nurse crop for clover and grass.

A common rotation in the Corn Belt consists of corn, oats, and grass or clover. This sometimes is extended to a 5-year rotation of corn two years, oats one year, and clover or grass two years. Usually this rotation is reduced to a 4-year sequence, including two crops of corn and one each of oats and clover, or one crop each of corn and oats and two of clover and grass. Another rotation is corn, oats, winter wheat, one year each, followed by clover and grass for one or more years.

Oats As A Nurse Crop

OATS as a nurse crop are not as satisfactory as some others, the foliage being too dense and the crop drawing too heavily on soil moisture. These objections are largely overcome by seeding early, short-strawed varieties. To insure obtaining the best stands of clover or grass, it sometimes is advisable to seed oats at less than the normal seeding rate where oats are grown for grain. Oats should be drilled when used as a nurse crop. The uniformity of space between the rows permits more light and air to reach the grass or clover plants than is possible if the oats are sown broadcast.

THE HOLT SCHOOL RECORD

Published by the Seventh and Eighth Grades

Vacation time is here again and school work will be forgotten for one week. We all hope that the teachers and every pupil will enjoy their holiday. Most of us have earned a vacation from our labors. We often hear of a person taking a few days "off" to go somewhere to spend their vacation. Some of us are tempted to ask, "A vacation from what?" They have done nothing to earn a vacation. However, most of us feel that this cannot be said of us.

All of the teachers will be leaving this week end for their respective homes to spend their vacation.

A simple device of telegraphy has been installed by members of the Physics class. Althougs the class has just began its work in this line and are perhaps rather amateour; the interest taken in the project will likely lead to a further study of that interesting subject "telegraphy."

The American History class is making a detailed study of Presidental elections as provided for by the Constitution of the United States. Newspaper items which supply material for the discussion and of party convetions are studied in class.

The fifth and sixth grades have just finished their play and are now making booklets to put in it. They are ready to select the one they wish to act out.

The fifth grades are putting pictures of La Salle into booklets and both grades are placing design on the covers.

The eighth grade Arithmatic class are studying the Metric System and its advantages over our system. Interesting work is being done and many problems involving the system and its equivalent to our own system are solved.

The seventh grade Geography class are beginning their general review of Geography. They are now studying the earth its movements, its composition, latitude and longitude, and seasons.

All of the pupils from the 3rd grade and up have been busily working for the W. C. T. U. prize contest and many good essays, stories booklets and pictures have been handed in. In the next issu we may be able to announce the the winners and the subjects written on.

Relief Bill Passed

The bill introduced by representative C. G. Selvig, Republican, Ninth district, Minnesota, for the relief of settlers in the Mud Lake area, east of Holt, in Marshall county, Minnesota, was passed by the House Friday.

The bill appropriates a total of $34,850.58, to twenty-nine persons to compensate them for improvements made on their homestead entries made in 1916. This area was later by a decision of the supreme court of the United States removed from entry but only after it had been settled by a large number of farmers.

The passage by the House to which it was recommended by the commitee on claims, marks a long struggle for consideration, Congressman Selvig said today. The origional claim was made to the general land office by former Congressman Halvor Steenerson, of Crookston, Minn., who presented the claims of the settlers.

An enabling act was passed by the 69th congress directing the interior to investigate the claims of the original homesteaders and report back to congress.

Seed Bed Preparation

OATS respond well to proper seedbed preparation. Where oats follow corn the seed frequently is broadcasted without any previous preparation of the land covered by disking and harrowing. It is better practice however, to disk the land before seeding, regardless of how the seed is to be sown. The seed bed for oats should be rather firm beneath with two or three inches of loose, finely pulverized, mellow soil on the surface. If soil conditions are at all favorable a fairly satisfactory seed bed usually may be prepared by two single diskings or one double disking followed by harrowing. Where oats are to be sown on land with standing cornstalks, it is advisable to drag down or break the stalks before disking. The disks should be set to run from 3 to 4 inches deep. Lap disking, usually leaves the surface more level than cross or diagonal disking, although the latter method frequently is used. A second disking is necessary to cover the seed when sown broadcast.

Good Seed Important

GOOD seed is essential for success with oats. Home-grown seed usually is preferable, provided the seed stock represents a high-yielding strain of a variety adapted to local conditions. The variety also should be reasonably free from admixtures of other varieties.

The germinability of oats usually is good. Oats that have been well cured in the shock or stack and have been stored properly usually will retain their viability for several years. If, however, there is doubt regarding viability of the seed, a test should be made. This may be done by placing 100 seeds on a wet blotter or wet cloth in the bottom of a dinner plate or pie tin. Cover this seed with another wet blotter or wet cloth over which a second plate or pie tin, preferably a slightly smaller one, is placed bottom upward. Keep the seed in a moderately warm room. At the end of five days it should be possible to count the number of seeds which have germinated. From 95 to 98 per cent should germinate.

Oats to be used for seed should be fanned and graded. Very light grains frequently do not contain a kernel and can not germinate even if sown. Fanning and grading oats to the extent that only the very largest and plumpest seeds remain is not necessary. Fanning and screening to remove weed seeds can not be overemphasized, as the eradication of noxious weeds is one of the most important problems of agriculture in the Corn Belt today.

Organized Choir

On Wednesday evening of last week a meeting was called at the Nazareth Lutheran church for the purpose of organizing a large choir. A good sized crowd met up to take part in the work. The meeting was called to order by C. Dale who was chairman of the organizing committee and, the following officers were elected to hold offices in the organization.

H. T. Larson, Pres; Joe Nelson, Vice-Pres; Magda Hagen, Sec; Emma Lunke, Treas; Rev. L. M. Redal, Choir Director; Henry Fosholm, Librarian; Mrs. H. O. Hanson, Mrs. E. Hagglund and Rev. Redal, Music Committee.

Twenty-five members were signed up to come and sing regulary in the choir from now on. There has always been a choir at the church but never has it had so many members, and more may join in yet. A good church choir is something that we can be proud of having. Their first big program will be held at the church on Sunday.

Rehearsal meetings will be held by the choir in the church every Tuesday evening at 8 p. M.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XVIII

SWEET CLOVER PASTURE: A good stand of sweet clover pasture will feed an average of two head of cattle per acre. Ordinary permanent paseure requires two acres per head. This plant, that a few years ago was considered a weed, has been found to be one of the most valuable for pasture.

Sweet clover pasture is valuable from five standpoints. It is a most rapid grower. It grows from early spring 'til late fall. It has a deep root system and withstands dry weather. It is the most nutritious pasture grass, being richer even than alfalfa. Being a legume it enriches the soil.

Sweet clover is a two year plant. It is seeded in the spring with a nurse crop-barley being best for this purpose. The next year it is pastured and then plowed up and may be seeded to barley and sweet clover again--following a two year rotation of barley and sweet clover pasture. From 12 to 16 pounds of seed is required per acre. The white blossom variety is best.

TRACES OLD RACE FOR FREEMASONRY

Briton Trails Ancient Symbols of Order.

Amarillo, Texas.—The trail which he has followed for 22 years in quest of proof of the existence of an ancient race to which he believes the foundations of the modern Freemasonry may be traced has brought Dr. John Winthrop Sargent to the United States.

He is in Texas to continue his research, which has taken him through Mexico, Central America and most of the South American countries.

Doctor Sargent is an explorer and director of the Dr. W. H. K. Staver expedition of the British Royal society and a nephew of the late John Singer Sargent, the painter.

By tracing the culture of this race through pottery and monument designs Doctor Sargent says he has become convinced that its civilization was of even a higher order than that of the ancient Egyptians. He says he found proof that that race had a knowledge of irrigation superior to that of modern times.

First evidence of the race in the United States was found at Three Rivers, N. M., he says, and the trail was continued to this vicinity.

The two cultural motifs which he especially seeks portray a man standing with arms upraised, one arm at right angles with the other, and a deer with three arrows piercing its breast.

"These two motifs," he declares, "have a decided bearing on an ancient society which has come down to the present and which is found in the Masonic lodge."

Doctor Sargent hopes to go on to Nicaragua to continue explorations which were terminated last December 18, when Sandino, the rebel leader, ordered him out of the country within six hours.

Discovers New Vitamine Assists Normal Growth

San Francisco.—A new vitamine, the sixth now known to science, and held capable of stimulating normal growth in undersized animals, has been discovered following long research with rats in the laboratories of the University of California.

Dr. Herbert M. Evans, chairman of the department of anatomy at the university, made the announcement. The vitamine, he said will be known as "Vitamine F," to follow after "Vitamine X," which was also discovered at the University of California.

The vitamine, said Doctor Evans, is essential to normal growth in animals, "which attain scarcely more than half their size and remain sexually immature without it." The experiments resulting in the discovery were entirely with rats, but would bring similar results in other animals, he said.

"When a food mixture consisting of highly purified casein and recrystalized cane sugar was employed," Doctor Evans said, "with the addition of necessary salts and the five known vitamines, the rats were scarcely more than half the normal size. Growth stopped altogether and the animals remained sexually immature. Natural food was necessary to awaken their growth and convert them into healthy animals.

"Among the natural foods, lettuce and liver were the most potent, and they therefore almost certainly contain the new sixth member of the vitamines."

Will Request Ashes Be Spread on Clean Ground

New York.—The will of Hector Tyndale, lawyer, filed recently, directed that "after it has been determined that I am dead beyond any doubt, my body shall be cremated and the ashes shall not be preserved, but spread upon or under the surface of clean ground in the open country, or on the open sea."

The estate, valued at "over $10,000," included 143,000,000,000,000 German marks. Of these the testator wrote: "In the belief that the German people eventually will require the redemption of all paper marks of wartime issue, I direct that my executors hold my marks of those issues until they can be sold at their cost to me, about $6,000."

Pronunciation Brings Cycle Thief to Grief

London.—A bit of snappy detective work has just been accomplished by a Northamptonshire policeman, who evidently also is a student of phonetics.

The "bobby," on duty near the village of Towcester, had a hunch that a man who passed him, wheeling a bicycle, might not be the machine's legal owner.

"Where do you live?" the policeman asked.

"Tow-cester," the man replied, pronouncing the word as it is spelled.

"No, you don't," the policeman retorted, and arrested him. At the police court the next day the man pleaded guilty to the theft of the bicycle. The "bobby" explained that no resident of Towcester ever referred to the town's names as other than "Toaster," and that it was the mispronunciation that confirmed his "hunch."

MASTER CROOK PINS MONEY ON VICTIM

Hint That Gang Law Must Be Observed.

New York.—The sardonic leader of a two-world crime band left his "calling card" pinned over the heart of a too curious member of his mob and now at last the police have a clew to New York's master criminal.

The "calling card" was a roll of $100 bills and they were pinned with a pistol bullet—the same pellet of lead that closed the prying eyes of Bill Doyle, alias Doll, ex-convict and safe cracker.

Behind him, the man who is believed to be an associate of the late Gerald Chapman and Dutch Anderson, left evidence of one of the most highly organized bands of international criminals that police have ever been confronted with.

Walk Leisurely Away.

Recently there was a shot in the ground floor of a luxurious uptown apartment house just after dark and a moment later a tenant entered in time to catch a glimpse of an expensively dressed man and woman step over a body lying in the doorway and leisurely stroll out the entrance and step into a taxicab.

The name on the doorplate of the apartment was Berkowitz, but the well-dressed couple had been known to the other tenants as Mr. and Mrs. "Ike" Behrman. When the police arrived a little later they found the apartment was empty save for a tiny white dog cowering in a corner, while an electric piano was still clamorously playing "Blue Heaven." The occupants had left behind expensive wardrobes. Several fur coats and a half dozen beautiful afternoon and evening gowns were hanging in the woman's closet, while carefully tailored suits for all occasions were in the man's compartment. The apartment was elaborately furnished with costly period furniture.

But what interested the detectives most when they arrived was the fact that at last they had been called to the headquarters of a long-sought international gang.

More than 300 telegrams and cablegrams from known criminals in Europe and this country and letters from Sing Sing were found. There were coded messages and cable messages which indicated the occupants had been involved in diamond smuggling and safe robbing in London, Paris, Berlin and the greater cities of the United States. There were cheap cotton gloves such as safe blowers wear, half a dozen hats and caps with labels torn out, drills and empty revolver holsters.

In addition there were automobile licenses for two cars—although the Behrmans were never seen to use anything except taxicabs. There was a book for a bank in Muncie, Ind., where Chapman and Anderson once had their headquarters.

Reconstruct Crime.

Detectives, after several days of study, have reconstructed events leading up to the crime and believe that it was carried out along the following lines:

Will Doyle, the man who got a bullet through his heart, was one of a hundred or more of the master criminal's contact men. His job was to spot safes to be robbed, houses to be looted and to establish connections with fences who would dispose of the spoils or sell the gems which the leader's European agents smuggled into this country.

It is believed several of the gang took part in the daylight robbery of a nearby theater the day before Doyle was shot to death. The spotter is believed to have made a mistake and the band looted the wrong theater, getting away with only a few thousand dollars where they had planned to make a big haul.

When Doyle got his share, which amounted to only $100, he complained to the payoff man, insisting that he should have more, and accusing the leaders of "playing crooked." There was an angry exchange of words and Doyle threatened to get even.

That evening, Doyle, still angry over the meager profits that came to him as his share, broke the most stringent law of the gang and walked boldly into the home of the master criminal.

Waving the roll of one dollar bills in his chief's face he demanded more money and threatened to "squeal" if it were not forthcoming at once.

The leader settled the debt as it usually is settled in gangland. And before leaving he pinned the payoff money to the victim's body as a warning to his other followers.

Detectives are confident that the many addresses and messages found in the apartment will lead to arrests in the capitals of Europe as well as in several cities in the United States. While they are following leads, the main hunt is centering on the capture of Behrman.

They Doubted Him

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS CONFESS HOLDUPS

Say They Shared in Robberies to Get Thrill.

Hagerstown, Md.—Dorothy Simmers, nineteen years old, and Hilda Little, seventeen years old, graduates of the Chambersburg (Pa.) high school, are back in the Chambersburg jail to await trial on charges of highway robbery. The girls, who have confessed to robbing for the thrill because of the "boredom" of their home town, jumped bail on the eve of their trial last October and were missing until their capture recently in Passaic, N. J., where both were employed as domestics.

An intercepted letter to the mother of the younger girl led to their capture.

With Charles Stepler, eighteen-year-old librarian of the Second Lutheran church, Chambersburg, the girls, it is alleged, acted as decoys for men whom Stepler, it is alleged, then held up at lonely spots where the girls led the victims. Raleigh Jones, the last alleged victim, became suspicious and notified the police. Dorothy Simmers was taken into custody for questioning and confessed her part of the holdups. When confronted, her companions also confessed.

The girls said they received $4 as their share of the first holdup, which netted $7, the victim being John Knoll, Chambersburg. They spent the money for ice cream and movies.

Mummies' Wounds Tell of Egyptian Battle

New York.—The story of a battle on the river Nile 4,000 years ago, as revealed by the mummified bodies of 60 soldiers, found buried in a royal Theban tomb, is told in a bulletin of the Royal Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Dr. H. E. Winlock, associate curator of Egyptian art at the museum, reconstructs the battle from reports of the wounds found on the mummies by the museum's Egyptian expedition.

From the small head wounds and the downward course of arrows found in the bodies, Doctor Winlock says the men must have died storming a castle, the head wounds evidently having been caused by small missiles from above. They were soldiers of King Menthuhotep, and the unusual honor paid them of burial in a royal tomb led to the conclusion they fell in an important engagement.

Other wounds on the bodies, the article says, shows that the soldiers were dispatched with clubs by the victors, after their comrades had retreated. Another attack, however, must have been successful, as the bodies were recovered for burial.

The tomb was first discovered in 1923, but because of the disorder, showing previous visits of thieves, it was sealed and not opened until recently. Meanwhile the expedition devoted itself to more promising excavations. When the tomb was reopened marks on the linen of the soldiers showed their period to be that of 2,000 B. C., an important find, as excavations had previously failed to discover what manner of men were the invaders who descended on Egypt from Thebes in 2000 B. C., conquered Memphis and started the second great period of Egyptian culture.

Gilding Lily Out, but Roses Are Illuminated

Boston.—There may be no profit in gilding the lily, but it appears that illuminating the rose is a pretty good business. At least engineers found it so in the garden of Gordon Abbott, Boston bankers, at Manchester-by-the-Sea.

Roses are illuminated by electric globes of proper hue. Tiny spot-lights produce special effects on rock formations, floral groups and fountains. By means of a mechanical moonlight effect the lawns can be flooded with soft steel-blue light remarkably like Luna's own product.

The camouflage artist was industrious, too. He concealed wires and lights in trees and shrubbery.

Baboon Blues

Nairobi, British East Africa.—Natives have found that baboons can be kept away from settlements if one is captured within sight of the others, clipped, painted blue and released to rejoin his mates.

Grain Is Currency, French Courts Rule

Paris.—As in ancient days, farm produce still is recognized as legal tender.

Farmers' contracts to pay bills in wheat and other foodstuffs have been held valid by the French courts, although contracts for payment in stable currencies have been voided repeatedly.

Farming "on shares" is a custom here as in other countries, and French farmers were astounded to have their usual practice questioned as an apparent violation of the law requiring the execution of all contracts in paper francs. The wording of the law apparently ignored "payment in kind," but the courts held that food, as a basic material, is relatively one of the most stable mediums of exchange.

"What put this idea into your head, that he might marry a county teacher?" Mr. Creighton anxiously asked. "If he'd go that far—disgrace me with a low marriage—"

St. Croix realized, as he told his father the grounds of his fears, that they sounded rather insubstantial. "But he must have been closeted a long time with that girl this afternoon, for it was nearly two hours after closing time," he explained. "And he seems to haunt her schoolhouse!"

"She's young and pretty, I suppose?"

"Young and pretty, yes, but deadly common!"

"How do you know? Ever met her yourself?"

"Yes. She's a relative of the farmer, Sam Schwenckton, and boards at his farm. I met her that night Sam Schwenckton snitched my watch."

"Attractive?"

St. Croix nodded. "But an impossible little vulgarian. I can't imagine why they let such illiterates teach our schools. She murders the English language as terribly as any uneducated Pennsylvania Dutch girl does!"

"I scarcely believe, St. Croix, that Marvin could be attracted to such a girl as you describe. He doesn't usually let his senses blur his judgment."

"I'd think, too, but for what I've seen with my own eyes, Father. If he could tolerate her for two hours—alone in her schoolroom with her—and then walk home with her for a mile—I should think he must be pretty far gone!"

"It wouldn't matter how far gone he were if it weren't that the young fool's apt, as you say, to marry her! Consideration for his family, for his mother—trifles like that!—would not stop him! Well, I'll nip it! I'll investigate the thing and if there's anything in it, I'll bribe the girl to go away."

"But wait—we haven't much evidence; it would be a pity to let her hold you up for a pile of money if there's nothing in it."

"I'll soon find out whether there's anything in it."

"But how?"

"If I can contrive to get in touch with her, the rest will be easy!"

"The danger of interfering is that it often starts just what you meant to prevent!"

"I wasn't born yesterday, St. Croix. Once I meet the girl, I'll soon find out enough to guide me. If I waited for indisputable evidence, I might be too late. I suppose I could drop in to see her at her school just at closing time, don't you think? Do you know what time in the afternoon the school closes?"

"About four o'clock."

"I'll look her over on Monday. It won't do to dally with such a possibility! I'm fast coming to the point of resigning myself to the fact that Marvin can't be coerced. Very well, then, we've got to circumvent him!"

"Conceited, obstinate ass!" muttered St. Croix.

"Nothing of the kind! He has one of the few qualities in which men differ from sheep. Backbone. He has backbone. Stands upright on his own. Refuses to get down on all fours and run after a tinkling leader!"

"Steps out from the herd and throws the whole works into disorder!" St. Croix contended.

"He would say he was starting them on a better path—away from the slaughter house."

"Sounds as if you agreed with him, Father!"

"You know better. But I respect his backbone. Gets it from me," Mr. Creighton concluded, as at this moment the waiter presented the bill and St. Croix rose from the table.

CHAPTER VII

When Marvin Creighton reached his father's house that same evening, he found, to his dismay, all the driveways about the place filled with limousines. A party on? But that was unlikely, for now that he no longer lived at home, he and his mother valued these Thursday evenings together too much to let anything interfere with them. This evening he especially wanted to see her alone for the reasons he had accurately stated to Miss Schwenckton—he wanted to see the photograph he had asked his mother to unearth and he wanted very much to hear about the English mail she had received.

He surmised that he had probably come in at the tail end of an afternoon club meeting—the "Quo Non Ascendus club," probably. Well, he didn't want to be caught in that bedlam! So he stole in at a side door and went upstairs to his own rooms.

The familiar sight of his bedroom and study, to which he could now come only on brief visits in his father's absence, depressed him. It all seemed so unnecessary, this bitter controversy between him and his father! Yet it was not a light thing of recent growth, but deep-rooted in their essential differences of temperament and character and outlook—his father being quite frankly primitive and "human" (he claimed) in his gospel of self-interest, while he himself was inherently, unconquerably socially minded. From his boyhood up his father had tried in vain to knock out of him his unbusiness-like consideration of the other fellow's point of view; and it had ended at last in their being unable to live under the same roof.

The hardest part of it to Marvin was the distress it caused his mother. If anything could have made him deny his soul it was that.

While he freshened up in his bathroom, reveling in its conveniences and comforts (there was no bathroom at Absalom Puntz') he wondered how Miss Schwenckton, who looked so dainty and seemed so fastidious, endured the crude life at Schwenckton's farm. She didn't fit into the picture.

He knew the party must break up soon, for it was nearly dinner time and most of these people had several miles to drive; and a few empty cups and saucers about the hall which the servants had overlooked told him they had already had tea.

How did his mother, comparatively intelligent, stand that crowd? And yet, how else would she fill her life, emptied, through her great wealth, of the wholesome necessity to work? Superfluous wealth was a joy-killer as surely as poverty.

The visitors were gone at last and Marvin went downstairs to take his mother in his arms.

It was cozy having his dinner alone with his mother; and the taste and comforts of his home, after his dose of Absalom Puntz' menage, were certainly soothing.

"Father thinks a dose of plain living will cure me!" Marvin smiled as he helped himself to fillet of steak and mushrooms the butler was passing. "On the contrary, living at Absalom Puntz' has made me realize, as I never did before, how much unnecessary luxury we have here, which I always took for granted, not knowing any other way of life. So this throwing me out on my own is just having the opposite effect of what he intended it to have."

"I don't like to think of your living in such discomfort, dear," his mother answered, "though you're not looking any the worse for it! But how in the world do you stand their food?"

"It's good. I walk about the country so much that anything tastes good. I'm getting to like sauerkraut and boiled beef and cabbage! Bully! And fried ponhaus! And even smearcase!"

"Imagine St. Croix eating at the table with those Puntzes!" Mrs. Creighton smiled. "Sauerkraut and smearcase and ponhaus!"

"It's not their food so much as the way they eat it that 'kreistles' me. Know what 'kreistles' means? Of course you don't. Means disgust, rubs me the wrong way, gets my goat. I can't watch them eat; they are too darned industrious about it."

"Marvin, I want to ask you something—I'm worried. St. Croix is philandering, I'm afraid, with a very common girl and I do dread what can come of such entanglements. It's so imprudent! You get about the country so much I thought perhaps you had heard or seen something of it, have you? Do you know who the girl is?"

"No," Marvin responded gloomily, his heart sinking; that car of his brother's near the William Penn school and Miss Schwenckton pretending she had remained in school to work when she had been out on the road—and that weird business of her changing her clothes—"How did you hear of it, Mother?"

"The girl sent a box of fudge here to the house for him, with a verse written on the wrapping paper—the poetry being as home-made as the candy! I gave it to him when he came home and he was so embarrassed and angry I knew he must be involved rather deeply—and I've been worried!"

"What makes you conclude, Mother, that she's a 'common' girl?"

"Her poetry!

"When you receive this box of futch
You'll mebby think it ain't so mutch.
But in one piece I put a kiss.
You'll know which one—the sweetest 'tis."

Marvin laughed joyfully—the author of that was not Miss Schwenckton!

"St. Croix certainly takes his chances, playing 'round with one of these Pennsylvania Dutch girls! First thing he knows he'll have a lawsuit on his hands. But I think," he tried to comfort his mother, "we may always bank on St. Croix' playing safe. Philandering is of course always dangerous where a suit for damages offers a big haul—but in St. Croix' philosophy of life, Prudence and Respectability are such influential factors think we needn't be anxious."

"Well, I hope so," she sighed. "Another thing I wanted to ask you—do you know, I'm beginning to think, Marvin, that there's more to this affair with our English cousins than meets the eye?"

"Aha! You are? Well, so am I! Go on—what's yours?"

"You know that for months St. Croix has been planning to go to England to see Lady Sylvia—and, Marvin, they keep holding him off! Their latest letter says Lady Sylvia has gone abroad. Now, of course they've no money to let her travel about the continent, so I'm sure she must have taken a position as traveling companion or governess. I'm beginning to suspect, dear, that she's as much averse to this rather ridiculous marriage scheme as you are yourself!"

"I should think she would be! Probably she prefers earning her own living!"

"But she can't earn enough to save the estate!"

"It's possible she may think more of her self-respect than of the estate."

"Well, her parents don't admit anything like that—they probably hope to persuade her—to bring her 'round."

"Vain hope, if she's a girl that's worth anything."

"Yes—only you must remember that the English don't regard such marriages as we do, they're so used to them."

"If she marries St. Croix, she's no better than any other courtesan that sells herself!"

"What are your suspicions, Marvin?"

"My 'suspicions'?"

"You said you agreed with me that there seemed more to this affair than meets the eye."

"Exactly. But let's not go so fast. About the girl's being 'abroad,' now—perhaps it's here, to America, that she has come to earn her living!"

Mrs. Creighton looked startled. "What makes you think that? Do you know that she has?"

Marvin regarded his mother uncertainly—a wild possibility flashing upon his mind. His mother was always perfectly open with him, but she was conscientiously loyal to his father and if his father had asked her to keep a certain secret she would certainly try to do it.

"Mother," he asked, his quiet tone concealing his strong feeling, "do you know that she's here?"—for perhaps he was being "worked"; perhaps the girl had been brought over here and placed where she was bound to cross his path, his father hoping that when his son met her without knowing who she was, he might "fall for her"; and all this talk about St. Croix marrying her was perhaps a bluff to throw him (Marvin) off the scent! Could this be possible?

Was the girl conniving with his father to trap him, that her family and her home might enjoy the Creighton millions? And was his mother playing a silent hand? But a girl that could lend herself to such a plot! He felt a revulsion of feeling against her at the bare thought of it and his heart sank like lead in his breast.

He would demand the truth from his mother; she would not deny it. He put down his coffee cup and took both her hands in his. "You know, of course, Mother, why I asked to see that photograph?" he hazarded.

"Why, no, Marvin, I don't," she answered, very puzzled. "Why did you? And what on earth makes you think she may be here?"

"Mother, what do you know about this idiotic business? Let me have the truth!"

"I don't know a thing about it, dear, that you don't know, or not as much, evidently. What do you mean?"

"You don't know whether Lady Sylvia St. Croix is in America?"

"Of course I don't. Why?"

The possibility still remained that his father and Lady Sylvia might be working without his mother's knowledge.

Here was an acid test of his suspicion. "Are you sure St. Croix means to go over to England and try for her?"

"Why of course! Why should I doubt it? He's crazy about it! You know that, dear. And so is your father. What is in your mind, dear?"

Marvin dropped her hands, leaned back in the deep couch and folded his arms. "I suppose I'm a fool, but I had a suspicion for a moment that Father had got the girl over here and was jabbing her on to me on the sly!"

Lightning Thought to Drill Hole in Glass

If any reader should find one of his window panes perforated by a perfectly round hole, without apparent cause, the first question he should ask is, Has there been a thunderstorm in this neighborhood recently? If the answer is in the affirmative, he may conclude that Jupiter Tonans, the lord of the thunderbolts, in playful mood has sent one of them through the glass. In ordinary English, the pane has been struck by lightning.

That is what probably happened to the plate-glass window of a New York building recently. A minute hole appeared mysteriously in the glass. Three employees were at work inside the window, and all three heard a distinct report. Particles of glass fell on one of them. Search failed to reveal any bullet or other object that might have caused the hole. It seems to have been due to one of the mysterious pranks of lightning.

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

Article Twenty-Nine.

The Squeeze Play

THOSE who followed the radio auction bridge games will probably remember that the squeeze play was used quite frequently and may have wondered why they have never encountered it in their own playing. The reason is very simple—it is an unusual play and is, as a rule, recognized only by unusual players. Cases where it might be used occur with great frequency but the declarer, all unconscious of the possibility, plays his winning cards and concedes the last trick or two to the adversaries. The conditions which make it possible should be studied with care and every player should be on the alert to detect the preliminary setting for it.

Simply explained, the squeeze play is compelling the adversaries to discard either a commanding card of a suit in which declarer holds the second best, or a guard for a stopper of a suit in which declarer holds several.

This may be done by leading a number of good cards in no trump or in a trump declaration after the trumps have been exhausted. For instance, suppose that declarer is playing no trump and his hand is reduced to the following four cards: hearts—King and nine; diamonds—ten; clubs—five. Senior has: hearts—Queen, eight and six; diamonds—Jack. Dummy has: hearts Ace, ten, seven and two. Junior has no diamonds or clubs, and two small hearts have been discarded. Declarer leads his good five of clubs and senior is caught in the squeeze. If he discards his Jack of diamonds declarer will win the last three tricks with the ten of diamonds and the Ace and King of hearts; and if he discards a heart declarer will lead hearts, catch the Queen on the second lead taken by dummy's Ace, and the ten of hearts will be good for the last trick.

The following complete deal illustrates this play and is also worthy of note regarding the bidding:

♠—A, 2
♡—K, 7, 6
◇—A, J, 7, 6, 3
♣—A, J, 5

♠—9, 8, 4, 3

East deals and bids one spade, the higher suit of his "two-suiter." South bids three hearts, jumping the bid unnecessarily in an effort to stop West from supporting his partner's spades. West and North pass and East shows his second suit by bidding four clubs. South can count only six sure tricks and so must pass, hoping for help from his partner. West decidedly prefers spades to clubs; therefore changes the bid to four spades. This is not a raise and does not indicate to his partner that he has a raising hand, but simply states that he prefers spades. North bids five hearts and all pass.

West leads his singleton club, dummy spreads his cards on the table and declarer counts his losing cards. One spade and one club seem to be losers—can he get rid of them? He can finesse the diamonds and if he is successful and can establish the suit a grand slam will be easy; otherwise he must wait and see what develops.

The play of the hand follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	C2	CA	C3	C6
2	H3	HK	D2	H2
3	H8	H6	C4	HA
4	H9	H7	C7	HQ

10	S4	CJ	CQ	H10
11	S8	D6	CK	H5
12	S9	S2	SQ	C8
13	DQ	SA	SK	S7

Declarer wins a grand slam.

At trick 7 declarer saw the possibility of a squeeze play and so discarded a spade and saved his small club. Upon the tricks 9 to 11 the discards from dummy were governed by West's discards. If West had thrown away his Queen of diamonds dummy's six would have been made good, but it was discarded on trick 11 because West still held the Queen. On trick 11 East was caught—his discard of the King of clubs made declarer's eight good; while if he had thrown the Queen of spades dummy's two of spades would have been good.

Derogatory Appellation

The word "doughface" was first coined by John Randolph of Roanoke. It means a person who is pliable and yielding. Randolph applied the term to northern politicians who truckled to the slave-power. He branded the Missouri compromise as "a dirty bargain, helped on by eighteen northern doughfaces." The epithet immediately passed into the slang vocabulary of politics. One authority suggests that possibly Randolph was improperly quoted and that what he really meant was "doe-faces," referring to the meekness of the doe. It seems more probable, however, that in its original application the term compared certain yielding politicians with the kneadable character of dough. James Russell Lowell defined "doughface" as a contented lickspittle, a common variety of northern politicians."—Kansas City Star.

RECALLS DEBTS; MAN RENEGES ON SUICIDE PACT

Former Army Officer Awaits Trial on Charge of Wife Murder.

New York.—A former army officer turned "welfare worker" is awaiting trial here as a wife slayer, all because of a queer mental quirk that permitted him to hammer a woman to death but wouldn't allow him to forget a couple of small financial debts.

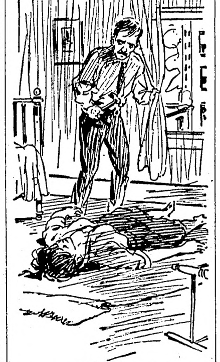
"Of course, I couldn't kill myself until I had paid those debts," explained Maj. Cecil C. Campbell to his captors, "my conscience wouldn't let me."

For exactly one week the murder of an unidentified woman in a room in the Grand hotel remained a Broadway mystery. Then four detectives entered a mission of the Volunteers of America in Philadelphia. They had been led there by an unpaid bill for a woman's coat, found near the victim's body.

Confesses Killing.

They approached a dignified personage of the "substantial man" type who sat folding letters and placing them in envelopes.

"Yes, I killed her," he replied when told he was under arrest. "It was a suicide pact which I failed to complete when I suddenly remembered I owed some money. I made up my mind that before killing myself I would pay off those people."



"I Went to the Window, Looked Out, and Lost My Nerve."

When his questioners expressed skepticism, Major Campbell produced a snapshot of a man and woman whom he described as "my wife and myself" taken a year or so ago.

"Here's my proof," he said. "This shows you the suicide agreement we made a year ago."

In that photograph Major Campbell appeared standing over a chair in which the woman was seated, her head bowed. In his hand was a hammer poised over her head.

Tells of Agreement.

"My wife and I went up to our room in the Grand hotel on Broadway. We had decided to carry out the suicide pact made the year before. Financial reverses led us to this decision. We prayed at length and asked forgiveness for the act we were about to commit. Then, while my wife looked at me, I beat her over the head until she was unconscious.

"We had agreed that I was to jump out the window after killing her. I went to the window, looked out and lost my nerve. Then I intended to drown myself, but I got to thinking about it, and suddenly recalled I owed several people some money. I made up my mind that before killing myself I would pay off those debts.

"A few days after my wife died I came to Philadelphia and reported to Col. C. C. Herron, commandant of the Volunteers of America. I told him I was a welfare worker out of a job and penniless."

Major Campbell, mission officials said, told them he had been robbed of $400 and a suitcase after he had fallen asleep on a train in Virginia. The next morning he got the job folding letters.

200 Historical Sites Marked in Wisconsin

Madison Wis.—Sites of old fur trading posts, Indian burial mounds, forts, trails, battlefields and missions are included among 200 historical landmarks in 41 counties of Wisconsin, which are listed geographically by Dr. Louise Phelps Kellogg in proceedings of the State Historical society of Wisconsin, just published.

Locations and inscriptions of the landmarks are published in a form handy for tourists, following well-known highways of the state.

Birth of the Republican party in a schoolhouse meeting March 20, 1854, is commemorated by a marker at Ripon. A building, reputed to be the oldest house in the state, built in 1776 by Joseph Roy, retired French voyaguer, and subsequently restored, stands in Union park at Green Bay, according to the survey. Points visited by Jean Nicolet, first white man in the state, have been marked. In a separate list are designated more than [illegible] memorials.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

GREAT GAME—MONEY

THERE is one thing for which the most of us strive all our lives—MONEY.

Ever since the world began the possession of money by one person has been the incentive for others to seek to take it away and add it to their own stores.

Sometimes this is done by honest means, by the channels of trade. But alyways there are dishonest and unprincipled individuals who with hooks baited with tempting financial returns are trading on the human desire to get more money and get it as easily as possible.

How much of your money has gone or at this moment is in danger of going to somebody who is dangling in front of you a possible financial return for your hard-earned funds that is tempting you to take a risk that you know is dangerous?

Earning money and saving money are useless efforts unless when you have acquired the money you are wise enough to take care of it.

Don't gamble in stocks. Wiser and richer men than you have "gone broke" trying to make money in "the market."

Unless you know about them, do not buy any securities of any kind without the advice of some one who is acquainted with the investment of money.

If your money is in a bank, and that is where it should be unless it is already invested, get some officer of the bank to advise you.

If you think that there is an advantageous opportunity to buy real estate, go to some man who knows real estate and take his advice. It will be better to pay him for the advice than to lose the money.

Look on your money just as you do on your health.

If you have doubts as to whether you are eating the right food, you go to some one in whom you have faith and ask advice, and follow it.

Do the same thing with your pocketbook and its contents. Get good advice and follow it.

If you have been wholly honest with other people in getting your money, be wholly honest with yourself in taking care of it, and you cannot be that if you hope and try to gain more from its investment than it can properly earn.

There is a reasonable expectation from investment. To get less than that is cheating yourself. To try to get more is to seek to cheat the other fellow. And that doesn't pay.

FOR CONVALESCENTS

THE choice of foods for the convalescent diet depends, of course, upon the nature of the illness through which the invalid has just come, as well as upon his personal taste and the whims that may be noticed in his weakened condition. But every effort should be made to provide tempting looking and tasting surprises for the convalescent, just as soon as the doctor recommends solid foods.

Most invalids and convalescents crave the stimulating, mild tartness of the citrus fruits, and these are much more appetizing and delicious to the sick as well as the normally healthy, when kept on the ice until time to serve. A tepid grapefruit or a warmish orange is not appealing at all. A glass of cold lemonade or orangeade, or the clear, undiluted juice of the latter fruit, is always a welcome drink to the invalid or convalescent, and dietitians have proved that the natural salts and minerals of these fruits actually help rebuild the depleted bodily tissues of the patient. Their vitamine content is high, and vitamines are health builders.

Eggs are usually an important item in the convalescent's diet, but he will get unmercifully sick of soft-boiled eggs, and poached eggs on toast, which are the standard home ways of offering them. The eggs can be deftly hidden in delicious omelets, or in nourishing custards and dainty little puddings, such as rice pudding, Brown Betty of several varieties, and in ice cream, which most invalids especially appreciate. Here is a dainty dessert for the convalescent who is just beginning to take solids:

Fruit Snow.

Beat two egg whites until stiff, add one-fourth cupful of orange pulp and juice, continue beating, adding powdered sugar to sweeten. Beat until the mixture will hold its shape, adding a few tablespoonfuls of whipped cream when serving.

SAWS

By Viola Brothers Shore

FOR THE GOOSE—

WHEN she loves, every girl is a woman. And when she's loved, every woman is a girl.

Livin' with a husband you gotta learn to shut up once in a while. But livin' with rich relations you can't even shut up. You gotta remember to say "yes" and "no" in the right place.

A person's real life ain't in the things they do every day; it's in the things they'd like to do.

FOR THE GANDER—

You can't expeck a woman to remember a gift you give her in the past; or believe much in one you're promisin' for the future. Gifts has always gotta be in the present tense.

When a feller wants to borrer money he says, "I'll pay you tomorrer." And he must mean it, judgin' from the number of times he keeps on sayin' it.

There's three facts a man can't hide for long—bein' ill-bred or well—educated or a serious rounder.

EXPERIENCE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WHITE-HAIRED, stoop-shouldered,
bent with age,
A man who knows by heart the page
That other men must turn today.
Surely the world must love the sage,
Respect the words that old men say.

But old men learn one lesson more,
After the heart has learned the rest:
That youth cares little for the lore,
The knowledge, by old men possessed,
For youth would rather life explore
Than ask the old which way is best.

For life is not an enterprise
That men can master in a school;
Man finds the truth because he tries,
And in exceptions finds the rule;
Perhaps the wisest of the wise
Are those who first have played the fool.

Although our words are often spurned,
Although the world will listen not,
A lesson that is quickly learned
Is just as easily forgot.
Only the man that fire has burned
Believes that fire is really hot.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

SETTING EGGS ON SUNDAY

IT IS a rather general belief all over the country that if you set a hen on Sunday the result will be that most of the eggs will hatch out roosters. In one section they declare that all the eggs will hatch roosters. The reason for this piece of hen-yard superstition—the hen-yard seems to be a place especially haunted by superstitions—is that in our nomenclature we still dedicate the first day of the week to the sun god—it is still the sun's day—and the cock, from most ancient times, was a sun bird.

Primitive man found that out from the way in which the cock heralded and saluted the sun's daily rising and so the cock became associated with the sun in all the old mythologies. It is true that this bird was a favorite sacrifice to Aesculapius, the god of medicine, but that was because Aesculapius was the son of Apollo, who represented the light-and-life-giving power of the sun as well as its deadly power and was often identified with the sun god Helios. The cock is the sun's bird, and what more natural then than if you set a nen on Sunday the eggs will hatch into roosters? This superstition is only one of the many relics of sun-worship which still hang about the hen-yard.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"BOTH SIDES OF SHIELD"

WHEN people are arguing or discussing a question they are admonished by the peacemaker to "look at both sides of the shield," meaning "get the other fellow's point of view." The expression is frequently met in the inspirational type of literature whose object is to promote understanding and harmony among fellow men.

It is obvious, of course, that in "both sides of the shield" the reference is no modern one. The saying has an old-time flavor, and it is in an old story that it had its origin.

The story is one of two knights who, coming from opposite directions, met in front of a shield, one side of which was gold and the other silver. One knight mentioned "this shield of gold," the other replied, "You mean this shield of silver," until a lively argument developed, with the knights becoming more and more unfriendly. At this point a third knight appeared, to whom the dispute was referred. He was wise enough to "look on both sides of the shield," and the quarreling knights shook hands!

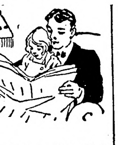
The SANDMAN STORY



MOTHER NATURE

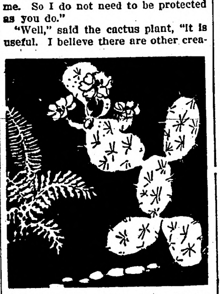
"YOU are very clever," said the fern to the cactus plant in the greenhouse.

The cactus had been telling the fern that the reason for all the prickles which it had on its leaves was to save the juicy stems from being eaten and destroyed by animals in the desert lands from which it and many of its family came.

"Oh, yes, we must have a protection if we're to grow, and in this way we're quite safe. No one wants cactus burs!"

"Of course I don't have the trouble that you do, for no one wants to eat me. So I do not need to be protected as you do."

"Well," said the cactus plant, "it is useful. I believe there are other creatures who do the same kind of thing as we plants—have some means of protection.



"All This Is Owing to Dear Mother Nature."

"There is the hedgehog, who can roll himself up into a prickly ball when he is frightened. That is his protection.

"Yes, there are many, many creatures who 'wear' their protection.

"The poisonous snakes have their poison right with them.

"Many little birds look like the woods in color so that they cannot be seen and some of the toads and frogs do, too.

"Ah, yes," said the fern; "all that you say is very true. But animals are different from plants.

"I think it is so particularly clever of you to be able to have protection such as you have and such very good protection when you're only a plant."

"Ah, fern," said the cactus plant, "you give me credit for more brains and sense than I have.

"All of this is owing to dear Mother Nature. She is the one who looks out for her children.

"She it is who saw that the cactus plants, or the Cacti as you speak of many of us, had prickles to save them from being destroyed.

"Yes, Mother Nature is the one who looks after us. She is not so busy that she hasn't time to remember all her children, every one."

Then a voice spoke.

"I didn't think I would hear anyone now," said the fern, "for our keeper has left for the day and the greenhouse is closed to people after the late afternoon has passed."

"I heard a voice; I most certainly heard a voice," said the cactus.

And again they heard the voice more clearly.

In another moment they saw the loveliest of lovely creatures.

"Oh, Mother Nature!" they all shouted. "Darling Mother Nature."

"There, there," said Mother Nature, "if you make such a fuss over me I will cry with joy. I'm glad little Violet made me a yellow and a purple and a blue handkerchief. For even though I have three handkerchiefs I may have to use them all."

Mother Nature wore a beautiful cape made of leaves, which was trimmed with a collar of summer flowers.

Her hat was of garden flowers and edged with a tiny border of little woodland wild flowers.

Her shoes were of moss and her dress was of soft, long green grasses and wheat and rye and barley intermixed.

"I wore my summer frock today of course," she said, as her greenhouse children admired her.

"I'm glad you like it. But, children, you were praising me for watching over you.

"I do not deserve any praise for that. I cannot help but watch over you. I love you—a mother who doesn't love her children is a very, very strange creature!

"Mother Nature isn't strange like that. She loves all her dear ones and she does what she can for them. It is only natural, only natural!"

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

ENVIRONMENT

A PERSON must either master his environment or it will master him. Environment furnishes poor excuse for failure. One may be more justified for blaming heredity for life's handicaps than environment.

Your environment is largely what you make it. You can have a home in a hovel and a hell in a palace. The forces which win out in life are life-forces. They exist within one's self rather than in outward circumstances and conditions.

Your thoughts determine your environment. What you choose as your environment is but a mirror of your own inner life. Environment is not dependent upon material possessions. It is the product of ideals, purposes and ambitions. You make your own environment. No one else makes it for you. While heredity is predetermined, environment is not.

Abraham Lincoln's environment was anything but conducive to inspire courage and advancement. He mastered it and in spite of it became the Great Emancipator. Aaron Burr, on the other hand, lived in an environment which should have lent him courage and leadership. In spite of it he turned out a traitor.

Environment is not to be taken for granted. It is to be met, wrestled with and conquered. The harder the battle, the greater the victory. No person reaches his highest goal until his work expresses the best that lies within himself.

I saw a barber the other day who looked like a governor or United States senator. Every other barber I have seen has looked like a barber.

There is no excuse for an action which will result in discomfort for others and in no profit to you. And most mean actions are open to both objections.

Little wonder people are spoilt: they are taught that it is an outrage for them to work while they live, and that when they die they will become angels, and able to play on harps without the necessity of taking lessons.

All have a good many humiliations, and are more agreeable because of them. What a rude lot we should be with only success to our credit! Were our bodies perfect, we should not be content to be followers of the gods: we should insist on giving the gods advice.

I have often written that it is easier to do a thing when it should be done than two or three days later. Last night I found in a magazine something I marked, and intended writing about today. This morning I cannot find it; the article disappeared from the magazine during the night, to punish me for putting off until tomorrow what I should have done at once. You elderly people who misplace things, and fuss and fume, I doubt if you can equal this experience.

I lately appeared as an after-dinner speaker with Elsie Janis, the actress, and young Stribling, the prize fighter. Miss Janis followed me and related that during the war a squad of American soldiers was detailed to shoot a German spy. They took him out into the country for the purpose, and walked miles and miles, through mud and brush, and other road obstructions. The German finally rebelled, and said: "I am not a coward; I am not afraid to die for my country. But it is an outrage to lead me away out here over these terrible roads for execution." Whereupon a young American soldier replied: "What are you beefing about? You've only got to be shot; we'll be compelled to walk back."

Neil Hamilton

Neil Hamilton, "movie" star, is a native of Lynn, Mass. It was the plan of his parents in his early life to prepare him for the priesthood. He had studied at several theological schools, but gave up the idea and joined a stock company in New York city, and after much success turned his attention to motion pictures. He is 5 feet 11 inches in height, weighs 155 pounds and has dark brown hair and eyes.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

LABELS

IF YOU don't want to be bothered with thinking about a man, just attach a label to him. It is one of the most effective means of curtailing thought that has ever been devised.

Suppose that in the course of a conversation the name of a brilliant young author bobs up. You don't like the fellow and you don't want to admit that his works are profound.

So you say "He's immoral." And there's an end of the matter. The fact that the man is immoral puts his works beneath your notice.

Suppose somebody else has a scheme for profit-sharing which he thinks could be applied to your business. Assume his arguments are sound and he has been able to show you that it would be to your own interest to give the plan a trial. But you don't want to worry about it.

"The plan's radical," you reply. And you thenceforth cease thinking about it.

During the World war it became the fashion to dismiss doctrines or ideas with which we did not agree with such labels as unpatriotic, Red, pro-German, un-American, antireligious and so on. If our arguments against such ideas were weak the labels were always capable of discrediting them.

Such labels have a sinister connotation which, to many minds, is amply sufficient to bring into disrepute the object to which they are applied. The label may mean little or nothing. Yet for many unthinking persons it has a vague and terrible significance.

How many of us, for instance, understand what the label "unpatriotic" means?

Even when a label may seem to fit its object it is totally beside the point. Take the label "immoral" which is such a favorite nowadays.

Does the fact that a composer disregards the prevailing customs of his day detract one bit from the beauty of his music? Suppose the label fits the man. What has that got to do with his music?

Be liberal with labels if you don't want to think. They are at least a means of averting wear and tear on the brain.

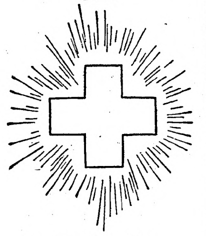
EASTER HYMN



Christ the Lord is risen today,
Sons of men and angels say:
Raise your joys and triumphs high,
Sing, ye heavens, and earth reply.

Love's redeeming work is done,
Fought the fight, the battle won!
Lo! our Sun's eclipse is o'er;
Lo! He sets in blood no more.

Vain the stone, the watch, the seal!
Christ hath burst the gates of hell.
Death in vain forbids His rise;
Christ hath opened Paradise!

Lives again our glorious King;
Where, O Death, is now thy sting?
Once He died, our souls to save;
Where thy victory, O Grave?
—Charles Wesley.

Hope Arose Out of the Empty Tomb

Easter commemorates and incarnates the resurrection of Christ. It is the annual festival of eternal hope, inspired by that fact. "He is not here; for He is risen as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." They looked and the tomb was empty.

Christianity rose out of that empty tomb. Christian civilization with all of its physical, mental, moral and religious phenomena, rose out of it. Christian art in architecture, sculpture, painting and music, comes from the same source. Philosophy and science follow a risen Lord. The uplifted moral and spiritual life of the individual and the world is a vital witness to this fact. Rain finds its radiant proof in blooming flowers. The resurrection of Christ finds similar proof in the growing life and institutions of Christianity. The human witnesses to the empty tomb are gone, but Christianity is a living witness giving incontrovertible proof of a risen Lord. Sin registered its verdict against Christ in the crucifixion, but the supreme court of the universe reversed this judgment in the resurrection.

God steps out of the shadow in the resurrection of Christ. The resurrection of Christ brought "immortality to light." The vague was darkened by doubt, was changed to the assurance of a dominant faith, and human despair was changed to radiant hope.

Let us try the pragmatic test. Does the theory of Christ's resurrection work? Emphatically, it does, Rev. H W. Knickerbocker asserts, in the Houston Post. Put to the test of practical use, it accomplishes divine results, and the truth of the theory is proved by this fact. Can a lie be the source of truth? Can hell be the source of heaven? Is Christianity with its righteousness the product of a stolen dead body? You may determine the nature of a cause by its effect. Like begets like. Christianity rose out of an empty tomb. The resurrection of Christ is proved by the fact of Christianity, and the truth of Christianity by the resurrection of Christ. The spirit of Christ is rising into the heart of humanity, and one day the moral resurrection from the death of sin will be complete in a Christlike world. This is "the one far off divine event toward which the whole creation moves."

TO FIND EASTER

Even the youngest knows by this time that Easter does not come on the same day of the month year after year like Christmas. Here is the rule for finding when it will come:

"Thirty days hath September,"
Every person can remember;
But to know when Easters come,
Puzzles even scholars some.

When March the twenty-first is past,
Just watch the silvery moon;
And when you see it full and round,
Easter will be here soon.

After the moon has reached its full,
Then Easter will be here,
The very Sabbath after,
In each and every year.

And if it hap on Sabbath
The moon should reach its height,
The Sabbath following this event
Will be the Easter bright.
—Onward.

April Fool and Easter

We have never connected April Fool's day with Easter, but our ancestors did. They said the day originated from the mocking of our Lord at Easter time. The Jews, on the other hand, say the day has nothing whatever to do with Lent, but a great deal to do with the Bible, for it was on the first of April that Noah sent out the first bird to find land—a foolish errand! So do we send April fools on fools' errands.

Time of Joy and Hope and Happiness

There are two festival days of the year that the world continues to observe with reverence. Human progress is marked by change of thought, by change of customs, by change of institutions. The dogma of today may be the myth of tomorrow. The conflict of science and traditional belief goes on. But there are two days on which all Christendom pauses to accept the overpowering significance of Christianity. These days are Christmas and Easter.

We celebrate the birth and resurrection of Christ as our forefathers celebrated these sacred events in the life of humanity. On these days, by common consent and impulse, controversy is suspended. On these days the faithful seek spiritual renewal, new strength for the obligations of life. On these days the indifferent are sobered and drawn into the mood of the time. On these days even the iconoclast is compelled to assume an attitude of respect.

On Easter day believers in the divinity of Christ renew their faith in immortality, a faith of immeasurable comfort to mankind. To them the time is one of spiritual exaltation, of added strength, of a more confident facing of the future.

For us all the day is one of joy and hope and happiness. It is consonant with the energies and manifestations of spring. It comes when the fields are green, the buds are breaking and the early flowers bloom in challenge of departing winter. It is a day of music and color—color in the flowers on the altars in places of worship, in the Easter processionals, in the dress of the season and in the panorama of nature. Faith, sentiment and custom have combined to preserve for Easter time consistent outward manifestations of the spiritual meaning of the day.

There is high hope in the constancy with which the two great festivals of the year are observed. Children still are taught the meaning of Easter. These observances will be remembered throughout their lives, as grandmothers and grandfathers can testify. They will help constitute the continuing background for that religious mood which nourishes the better impulses of men and women.

EASTER GREETINGS

Sport of Egg-Rolling Popular in England

Egg-rolling is still a popular Easter pastime in parts of northern England, notably at Preston. The eggs used are boiled very hard and are artificially colored. Thousands of factory workers gather on the hillsides on Easter Monday and roll their eggs down the slopes.

"Good Egg!"

The object of the competitors is to break as many as possible of their rivals' eggs, the winner being the one whose egg remains intact the longest. At the end of the day the slopes are literally buried beneath eggshells, for as soon as an egg cracks it is eaten by its owner. To avoid disputes the name of the owner is generally written on his egg.

Easter

New life
Pulsating through the world
With every hour.

New life,
New hope and new endeavor;
Give us

For Easter—ever.

His Spirit Everywhere

The Risen Christ still lives. He meets you every day in the workshop and office and on the street. He is found in homes, in hospitals, and in institutions ministering to misfortune. He lives in men and women who radiate love and helpfulness.—Grit.

A Few Little Smiles

SHOWER OF SILVER

Loving Wife—Now that you are ruined, Henry, I will disclose my secret. For years I have been saving up, and now (pouring a shower of silver coins into his hat) this may tide you over.

Husband—Oh, my darling, how did you manage to do it?

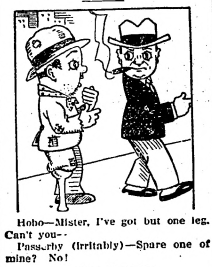
Wife—Easily enough. Every time you said an unkind thing to me I put a shilling into a box.—Weekly Scotsman.

Bad Audience

"I understand you intend to make a talk over the radio."

"I have given up the idea," said Senator Sorghum. "I've heard some of those radio talks. Just when a speaker thought he was making a hit, the audience at our house was going into a doze."—Washington Star.

NONE TO SPARE



Hobo—Mister, I've got but one leg. Can't you—

Passerby (irritably)—Spare one of mine? No!

Stump Dependence

Politically on the jump,
Spellbinders now we see,
With more dependence on the stump

Competition

American dramatic critics are noted for their devastating frankness. An alleged comedy was produced in New York a short time ago, and one criticism concluded:

"Laughter coming from the rear rows indicated that somebody was telling a joke back there."

Two Gifts

"That's a fine letter case, old man."

"Yes, my wife gave it to me on my birthday."

"Fine! Anything in it?"

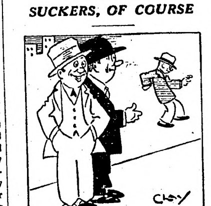
"Yes—the bill for the case."

Worse!

Woodman—Your wife hasn't spoken to you for a week? You're lucky.

Conrad—Oh, I don't know. She talks about me to herself and I have to listen.

SUCKERS, OF COURSE



"He made his money out of fish."

"Suckers, I suppose?"

Afraid of a Licking

Johnny bought a nice air-gun,
And aimed it at a chicken.
He never pulled the trigger, though.
He didn't want a lickin'!

Bigger Game

"She was going to marry him until she found out how much he was spending on clothes."

"Yes."

"Now she's going to marry his tailor."

Watch Out!

Doctor—H'm, I can't understand what causes your rapid pulse.

Ailing Burglar (feebly)—Expect it's the sight of that there gold watch, doctor.—Passing Show.

Sure Enough

Hortense—Harold and Donald are always trying their best to out-slang each other.

Marjorie—Oh, yes; that is always the way when college youth meets college youth, my dear.

Corrected

Farmer—If I were as lazy as you, I'd go and hang myself in my barn.

Hobo—No, you wouldn't. If you were as lazy as me you wouldn't have any barn.

Death Comes Quickly in the Electric Chair

The efficiency and rapidity with which criminals are put to death in the electric chair is explained by Frederick Tisdale in an article in Liberty.

"The process of strapping in the criminal and attaching the electrodes is completed in about 49 seconds," points out the writer. "So swiftly do the attendants work that the current enters the prisoner's body 70 seconds after he enters the death chamber. The current is kept on about two minutes. A second and even a third shock may be administered as a precaution. While the current is on a humming sound is produced in the body.

"Penologists declare that death by electrocution is instantaneous," continues the author. "The heart is stopped and the brain paralyzed before the nerves can register any feeling. The veins and arteries offer a perfect course for the current."

Lacked Support

Father—Here's a C in your report again, in spite of your getting help at home all this term.

Young Son—That's hardly fair, pop. That C's only in deportment, an' you didn't give me any help in that.—Stockholm Kasper.

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys

Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Lady-in-Waiting Did Not Quite Get Point

Walter Hampden's production of "Caponcacchi"—a stage version of Robert Browning's remarkable poem, "The Ring and the Book"—recalls an excellent story about Queen Victoria.

It appears that Sir Theodore Martin had been asked by the queen to read to her some portions of "The Ring and the Book." Sir Theodore, knowing his "Ring," put marginal notes against certain passages which he thought might not appeal to the royal sense of propriety.

The marked copy happened to come under the notice of one of the ladies-in-waiting, who told a friend:

"I have so greatly enjoyed reading this wonderful poem, and it has been so pleasant to read it after the dear queen, who has marked the most beautiful parts, and what exquisite taste her majesty has!"—Kansas City Star.

Lost and Found

Mr. A. C., a Civil war veteran and former railroad man, enjoys telling this joke on himself: His brother, also a Civil war veteran and former railroader, resembled him to some extent, but had lost an arm in the railroad service. This brother, Mr. C. C., had nothing to occupy his time, so he amused himself frequently by watching the boys play marbles on the sidewalk. One day Mr. A. C. stopped on his way to his office and watched these same boys play. They looked at him in amazement and one fellow piped out, "Why, mister, you have found your other arm!"—Indianapolis News.

Education by Mail

To meet educational needs of families living in remote parts of Manitoba and of children unable on account of physical handicap to attend school, a system of correspondence instruction has been inaugurated by the provincial department of education. It is estimated that about every fourth person in the province of Manitoba is seeking by study to reach a higher educational standard.

In Saskatchewan, where an outpost's correspondence school has been maintained for two and a half years, enrollment has reached 247. It is believed that about 20 per cent of the students are of foreign extraction.

Parasol Sails

Experiments have been made abroad with a new kind of sail for boats. The sail when spread resembles a large umbrella. The mast, occupying a position similar to that of the stick in an umbrella, turns on a pivot at the bottom. It is usually inclined about 45 degrees to the horizon, but the inclination can be adjusted to suit the force of the wind. The inventors claim that with this sail, "heeling" of the boat can be avoided, while at the same time the sail tends to lift the boat and thus enables it more easily to mount the waves.

Appreciative Quail

No One Respects a Liar

I find great pleasure in a truthful man. One can depend on what he says, and learn from him. . . . But no one pays any attention to a liar, or much respects him. I have never known a really successful man who was a liar. Men of that disposition soon learn, if engaged in real affairs successfully, that untruthfulness is a drag, like a suit of clothes when in swimming.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

Helping the Action

Harry—But I can't hit harder.

Boxing Professor—Sure you can. Punch as hard as if I had taken a fancy to your sweetheart and had stolen her affections.

Annoyingly Silent

Elmer—Do you talk in your sleep?

Roy—No; my wife says I'm perfectly exasperating—only smile!—Exchange.

New Location Found for Garden of Eden

Europe may have been the Garden of Eden, and the "missing link," which has so far eluded scientists, may be found on that continent, according to the theory of Sir Arthur Keith, one of England's most prominent scientists, one of the leading officials of the Royal institution and head of the British association. Sir Arthur advanced this theory following the discovery by a German geologist of a "Heidelberg jaw," which the British scientist said is the earliest European human now known to science. He asserted that the discovery is one of the biggest of its kind concerning the origin of humans. "There thus really seems to be a chance that Germany is going to produce the 'missing link,' and it looks very much as though Europe really was the 'Garden of Eden,'" Sir Arthur said.

NEW FRIENDS FOR OLD

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

LOTTY BENNETT tapped on the window to the woman who was approaching her house. She had not the least doubt that Laura Wayman was coming to see her, but she wished to let Laura know that she was expected. They had been friends for years.

Laura waved her hand lightly, seemed to hesitate and then came in as Lotty eagerly opened the door for her. She was a large, soft-looking woman of matronly carriage with a fondness for wearing faded-looking greens and pinks. At the present moment she was wearing her best hat, gown and wrap and she had a small box in her gloved hand. Lotty, who was small and dark, glanced at the box, wondering what sort of offering Laura had brought her. Past experience had taught her that Laura was always making offerings which, though trivial in themselves, were the expression of an abounding interest and friendliness.

"I can't stay a minute," Laura said, dropping down upon the edge of a chair. "How pretty your hyacinth is! Mine has been out a week. I've got a few hermits here in this box for Mrs. Parcell. She's been having quite a time with her stomach."

"Oh!" So the offering was for Mrs. Parcell! Lotty's faithful breast heaved. Mrs. Parcell had lately moved into the big green house farther up the street. She was fashionable, a widow with every evidence of possessing extensive means. Yet Lotty did not like her.

"I mustn't stay a minute longer." Laura rose to her feet. "I'm in the greatest rush today. Paperhangers coming tomorrow to do the dining room. You know how it is in the spring, my dear."

She was gone. Lotty looked wistfully after her. It couldn't be, of course, that after their long and unbroken friendship Laura would prefer Mrs. Parcell, a stranger and a newcomer, to herself.

Yet it was more than two hours before Laura passed the house on her way home from the widow's. Lotty kept watch. Laura, who had not been able to give her two minutes, had given Mrs. Parcell two hours!

The next day Lotty waited for Laura to call her up on the telephone and request her company to the meeting of the Woman's club. It was a thing Laura usually did. But this time she was silent. Lotty waited, hoping, reluctant to demand reasons of her friend, and finally went with old Mrs. Briggs. Ten minutes after she and Mrs. Briggs were seated in the firemen's parlors, where the meeting was to be held, Laura Wayman entered with the breezy widow. So that was why she had not gone with Lotty!

Lotty was too timid, too gentle, too kindly disposed to be suspicious or resentful. She was only hurt to be thus set aside for Mrs. Parcell. She had never seen Laura so carried away. Still there was nothing she could do. She did not like Mrs. Parcell. Mrs. Parcell evidently did not think her worth while. There was no way of making a triangle out of it. She must get along without Laura as best she could.

Two weeks passed and Laura never once came to Lotty's house. Yet every day she went to call upon Mrs. Parcell and always with that little familiar offering.

"Laura Wayman's all taken up with Mrs. Parcell, isn't she?" said Mrs. Briggs. "Now, just you wait. You'll see something. It won't last."

Lotty said nothing. She could not speak without tarnishing the friendship which had so long existed between her and Laura. She could only suffer.

Then the worst thing of all happened. Always hitherto Lotty looked forward to that day! The bright shops, the selection of her modest wardrobe, and the company of Laura, who was a most experienced shopper. Now, when the time had arrived she heard nothing from Laura and Laura always made the first move.

Lotty had to have a coat and hat and frock and could no longer delay getting them. She decided to go alone. She knew her way about, of course. It wasn't that, but she hated to go without Laura. And, indeed, it was a test of the little spinster's courage and self-reliance.

Alone in the city, Lotty made her simple purchases at her favorite department store. Then she went to the Rickman for lunch. It was a big, expensive place, but somehow she could not bear to go to the little cozy restaurant where she and Laura had enjoyed so many tasty lunches together. Besides, she was tired and the Rickman was handy.

As she entered and sat down she saw in a wall mirror the reflection of two heads bent over one menu card, Mrs. Parcell's and Laura Wayman's. She turned and beheld them sitting not far away, engrossed in each other.

"They have come in Mrs. Parcell's car," Lotty thought. Mrs. Parcell drove a Stylish-Six. A faint flush came over her face and she took hastily a swallow of coffee.

They had not seen her. Lotty felt sure of that. But in the mirror Lotty could perceive their every movement. Mrs. Parcell ordered chicken salad—it looked like alligator pear—sherbet, asparagus. Laura was excited and gay. She loved her food.

The taste was gone from the simple fare set before Lotty. She crumbled her roll and sipped her coffee, meaning to steal away as quickly as possible. On second thought she decided to stay where she was. The instant she arose to go Laura would see her. The easiest way would be to wait until they had passed out. She could see that they were hurrying to get through—that is, Mrs. Parcell was hurrying. Oh, dear, Laura ought not to cram like that. It was not good for her. Lotty felt a pang of distress on Laura's account.

The lunch hour began to draw to a close. People arose, moved out. Lotty was watching a stunning woman in a green hat and wishing that she could wear anything but brown or dark blue when a touch fell on her arm. She turned, there was Laura bending over her.

"Lotty," Laura said, in a crimson, breathless, mortified way. "I am in such a predicament. I haven't money enough to pay for the lunch. Could you lend me $5."

There was a $5 bill, a $1 bill, two pennies and her return ticket in Lotty's purse. She took out the five and gave it to Laura, who thanked her and hurried away.

Lotty paid her bill with the remaining dollar and went out. She had planned to get her a blouse with that five. There was nothing left for her to do but to go down to the station and take the 1:30 train.

She sat waiting when Laura bounced in bearing a few small parcels. She made a dive for Lotty and sat down beside her.

"I saved enough out of that $5 you loaned me to pay my fare home," she panted.

The train came in and they got aboard. Lotty wondered what on earth had become of Mrs. Parcell, but she resolved to ask no questions. Laura, she could see, was terribly excited.

"There!" Laura burst out as the train started. "Now I can tell you, Lotty, about that—woman."

"Car broke down?" Lotty asked the easiest question she could think of.

"Car hasn't anything to do with it. Let me tell you. She asked me to come here with her today, assured me that I wouldn't have to pay a cent. My companionship was all she wanted. Well, my husband gave me $10, all he could spare, and I bought a few things I felt I had to have. I suggested going to the Quick Lunch, but nothing would do we must go to the Rickman. Mrs. Parcell ordered everything she could think of and then she invited me to pay the bill! I was caught—only 36 cents in my purse. My dear, if it hadn't been for you—and your generosity I should have been placed in a most embarrassing position. Mrs. Parcell suggested going to the matinee at the Stone—$2 a seat, and I knew I would be in for that, too. So I retreated I—I'm afraid I told a great many fibs," poor Laura wiped her eyes, "but I got away while I could. She had picked up some acquaintance, a woman in a green hat, a Mrs. Swarthmore—I didn't take any fancy to her looks—so I guess she was glad to get rid of me anyway. But, oh, Lotty, how it does feel to be turned down in that way doesn't it?"

Lotty glanced at Laura. She saw that Laura had no idea of anything but her own woes. Poor thing! She demanded sympathy.

With a murmured word of understanding Lotty patted her friend's, her restored friend's hand.

Holidays Serve Good Purpose in Education

"Holidays," said Mrs. Jason Lindeman, social worker, "are not merely vacation days. Each has its patriotic reminder and lesson, and, for the young folks especially, repictures some of the events that have led to the making of the nation.

"It is for this reason that we launched the crusade to compel factories in certain cities to observe all the legal holidays. It helps in making good citizens. Too many of these sweatshop waifs, toiling year in and year out, seven days a week, never heard of Washington, or Lincoln, or Armistice day. How could they?

"I asked a little colored lad to state what holiday he had in July.

"'Neber had none,' he declared.

"'Think hard,' I insisted. 'Of course you had one.'

"'No'm,' he insisted, 'Ah don't hab to. Ain't nobody in mah fambly died fo' a long time.'"

Word's Meaning Changing

Generally speaking, a boulevard is a broad city avenue designed for pleasure walking or driving. A new idea is creeping into the word. It carries the meaning of a long, main street upon which traffic has precedence over vehicles approaching from side streets. Originally a boulevard was a fortress or tower rampart, hence a street or walk laid out on the site of such a rampart after its destruction. The English word "bulwark" and the French "boulevard" are derived from the German "bollwerk" or Danish "bulvaerk."

Advancement in Russia

Organized physical culture is making rapid strides in Soviet Russia, the membership having increased in the last year from 2,700,000 to a present enrollment of 3,0[illegible]00 persons. The membership is about evenly divided between men and women, while students comprise more than half the total enrollment. Workmen with 22 per cent of the total membership, and office employees, comprising 18 per cent, are the other most important classifications.

Origin of Colds Sought

The average American is said to have two good, hard, common colds each year. Despite the fact that doctors see more of these colds than almost any other disease, little or nothing is known of the cause of common colds. In view of the fact that colds are responsible for so much suffering, as well as economic loss, Johns Hopkins university has started a five-year research into the causes, nature and possible cure of this disturber of human happiness. The work was made possible by a gift of $195,000 from the Chemical foundation.—Pathfinder Magazine.

THE BANKER-FARMER MOVEMENT GROWING

There are several reasons for the growth of the banker-farmer movement in Pennsylvania, William S. McKay, Chairman of the Agricultural Committee, Pennsylvania Bankers Association, has reported to the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association. The cooperation and leadership of the county agents in the several counties of the state; the appointment and functioning of county chairmen of agriculture known as Key Bankers, one of whom there is in each county of the state; and the organization of county bankers associations, whereby agriculture is given consideration by all the banks, are responsible for this interest. The following table shows the activities for the year:

Project	Number of Counties
Sent young farmers to state college for special course	5
Encouraged farm shows	16
Held agricultural tours	6
Sponsored various club activities	38
Gave illustrated lectures on poultry, cow testing, and improved farm methods	1
Distributed purebred livestock, chicks, and disease-free potatoes	13

"There is probably no class of business men that has a greater opportunity for helpfulness than the bankers in this movement," declares Mr. McKay. "It builds up a substantial community which makes for better banking institutions; it adds to the material prosperity of our state, but above all, it is the expression of a service which will react favorably upon the character of those interested."

BANKERS HELP OUT

The Oklahoma Bankers Association for the past twelve years has financed through its five groups ten scholarships in the A. & M. College at Stillwater. The winners are chosen by the Extension Department of the college on the merits of the club work done by the boys and girls over a certain period of time. The groups of the association finance the first year of the winner's college work.

The president of a national bank in Fayettesville, Arkansas, has been credited with doing more for the farmers of his section than any other one man. His work has consisted of introducing pure bred Holstein cattle into his county, helping employ a county agent, donating prizes to boys and girls in club work, and distributing better seed.

Here are some of the things accomplished in Randolph County, Ark., with the help of bankers last year: forty-three purebred gilts were bought at a reasonable price and placed with boys and girls, on notes; three thousand eggs from high producing hens were distributed with the idea of developing flocks of at least one hundred hens on every [illegible]; four purebred Jersey bulls whose dams had a record of over 700 pounds butterfat, have been purchased by the banks and will be paid for out of service fees.

LESSON XIX

CLOVER: There are three varieties of clover commonly grown in the state—Medium Red, Alsyke and White Clover. Medium Red and Alsike clover are grown for both hay and pasture. White clover is grown for pasture only.

Medium Red and Alsyke clover are next to alfalfa in feed value for dairy cows. Their yeild per acre for hay is also next to that of alfalfa and they are next to sweet clover in value for pasture. Clovers will grow well on soil too sour for alfalfa or sweet clover. Alsyke clover is especially well adapted for low ground. White clover makes the best permanent pasture and shoud be used where the land is too hilly or stony for crop rotation.

Medium Red clover is seeded at the rate 10 to 12 pounds per acre, Alsyke from 5 to 6 pounds per acre and white clover at the rate of 3 to 4 pounds per acre. Blue grass is commonly used with white clover for permanent pasture. Good clover pasture greatly increases milk production in comparison with timothy or wild pasture.

IF your newly-arrived chicks could talk they would say: "Do not feed us until we are 72 hours old. We are supplied with food during this period by the remaining part of the egg yolks which we absorbed into our bodies just before we were hatched. When we are 72 hours old give us a feed which will provide life and growth vitamins." There are 1592 hatcheries which say, "Feed Purina." They know what it takes to keep chicks alive and growing. FARMER'S WIFE GETS STRENGTH

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Schoolfield, Va.—"My mother had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I decided to take it for my own troubles and found great relief. I was hardly able to stand on my feet sometimes and now I feel better than I have for several years. I credit the Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with my present good health. I have taken five bottles of it and I am now able to do all my housework and sewing, feed my chickens, milk the cow and tend the pigs, and feel fine."—Mrs. J. C. "This, in brief, is the career of a gag," writes Robert E. Sherwood in the new Stokes book "Mirrors of the Year":—

Pointer for Collectors

As officials prepared to hand out medals struck in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the state government of New York at Kingston, they were shocked to find that the letter "N" had been left out of the most important word on the medals—"Sesquicentennial." The legend on the bronze read: "Sesquicentenial." Hasty conning of dictionaries confirmed the suspicion that there was no authority for such simplified spelling. But optimists perceive a silver lining in the cloud. They point out that errors have made stamps and coins valuable, and that maybe the mistake will add to the value of the disk.

"Used Cars" Not Wanted

The used car seems to be a world problem. Polish motorists are abandoning the custom of selling their old cars only to their friends; the friends are becoming rich enough to buy new machines. Dealers in Bolivia have refused to accept "trade-ins" on new cars and the government has 15 old vehicles it would like to sell at any price. Egyptian dealers have organized a used-car sales company to handle all such machines. Rumania once was a good used-car market, but now motorists want the latest types and improvements.

Aeronautics Aids Farmer

Aeronautics, after adapting the windmill to its own purposes, is returning it to the farmer greatly improved as a result of the intensive research made by the aircraft industry. Changes in the number of blades and the pitch of the propellers used to drive electric generators on airplanes at the army laboratories at Dayton, Ohio, have resulted in a new type of wheel for ordinary windmills. This increases the speed of revolution from six to ten times that of the old-fashioned wheel.

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

By PAUL H. SEYMOUR
Author of "Highlights on Auction Bridge"

(Copyright, by Hoyle, Jr.)

Article Thirty.

Discards

DISCARDING is one of the most difficult operations for a beginner at Auction Bridge and many a trick is thrown away by careless or mistaken discards. The fundamental rules regarding this matter are: not to unguard a face card; and to discard from the weak suit or suits. For instance: if holding a Queen and two small cards of a suit which has not been led, both of the small ones must be saved because if one is thrown away the Queen becomes unguarded.

The discard is used to indicate to partner certain things about a hand; and there are several methods which various authorities advocate. The simplest method is to discard from weakness and let partner infer strength in suit not discarded. If, for instance, a spade is being led and you are void of that suit but have good clubs you could indicate this by discarding a small heart and a small diamond. But if you want to inform your partner quickly or think that you will not get a chance to make a second discard you may discard one of your strong suit as high as an eight. In other words a low discard indicates weakness and a high discard indicates strength.

Trouble frequently comes regarding the discard when a hand has several cards of an established suit of which the partner is void and only one possible card of re-entry, a guarded face card.

Suppose at a no trump declaration your hand contains the last two spades and three hearts to the Queen and a club is led. Your spades are good but to make them you are absolutely dependent upon getting the lead with the queen of hearts. If you discard a small heart you unguard your Queen and lose all possibility of making even one of your spades; therefore you always should discard good cards rather than to unguard your only re-entry card.

When declarer is playing a long suit the adversaries often have to make a number of discards and when this is the case they should try to understand each other and work together by each one holding a guard for the suit which his partner is discarding. This can be done only by watching the cards carefully and remembering the discards made by other players. It frequently happens that you must unguard a face card by discarding and when this is true continue to discard from the same suit rather than to keep two guards with a Jack and one with a Queen in different suits. In other words, if you are compelled to unguard a Jack you would better continue discarding that suit, Jack and all, rather than to begin on another suit containing a barely guarded face card.

Sometimes in place of giving partner as much information as possible by discards it may be advisable for the sake of deceiving the declarer to give incorrect information. If declarer on your right is running a long suit from his dummy and you discard small cards of another suit he is quite apt to start that suit next and take a finesse in it because you have indicated weakness by your discard. Therefore, to deceive him it would be perfectly proper for you to make a low discard from a suit in which you held the King. In such cases one always must judge whether such a play could possibly do any harm by misleading the partner.

From a declarer's standpoint, watching discards is a very important matter. When a declarer can run a five-card suit first it always is wise to do so and gain information regarding the adversaries' hands by their discards. Frequently a declarer cannot decide which suit to start second until he has finished the first one and watched the discards. If the adversaries are foolish enough both to discard from the same suit it usually gives declarer an opportunity to establish this second suit easily.

The direction in which to take a finesse often can be decided from discards provided you know your adversaries' method of playing well enough to be sure they are not deceiving you.

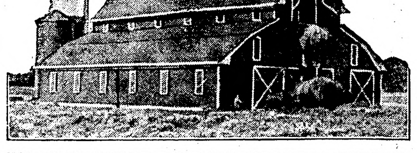
In playing a declared trump declarer frequently may be able to lead several winning cards of a suit from his own hand of which dummy is void and discard from dummy another suit of which the adversaries hold the command. Then use one or more of dummy's trumps on the suit just descarded before extracting trumps.

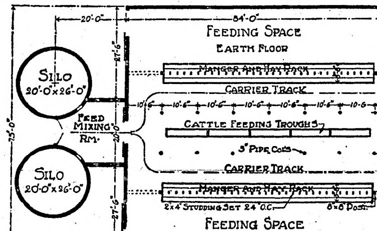
When playing against a no trump and your partner has opened a long suit be sure not to discard your last one of that suit. Save it to lead back to him.

Drudgery

Drudgery, toil—it requires a minimum of effort, of intelligence, and no imagination or initiative. It merely requires constant, daily, monotonous attention. Instead of its being, as we sometimes say of uncongenial tasks, "took much like work," it's not enough like work. There is no personal interest, no chance to use the mind, no challenge to the pride, the skill or ingenuity of the operator, no chance to grow—in other words, no real chance to work at all.—Jesse Lynch Williams, in Hearst's Cosmopolitan.

Profitable Handling Depends Upon Proper Housing for Beef Cattle





By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Much attention is given to the question of proper housing of dairy cattle, but it sometimes seems that beef cattle do not receive their due share of attention. If the raising of beef is to be made profitable good housing is an essential and, when it is time for "finishing," a well planned cattle feeding barn should be available. Such a barn is shown in the accompanying illustration together with a plan indicating its interior arrangement and equipment.

... room connecting with two large silos. Doors are so arranged as to provide a straight drive through along each side and down the center of the barn, through the mixing room and out between the silos. Extending down the center of the barn is a long cattle-feeding trough with a manger and hay rack of equal length at each side of it and parallel. Between the feeding trough and these mangers, carrier tracks are provided for quicker and easier handling of feed.

While this barn is set on a concrete foundation an earth floor is entirely satisfactory for the interior, and this makes the cost of construction considerably lower than that of an equal-sized dairy barn, as does also the less elaborate equipment. The upper portion of the structure is supported on 5-inch pipe columns and above there is provided a large loft for the storage of hay and dry feed. With such

Organize Search for Treasure Long Buried

They are organizing a company in London to search for $60,000,000 worth of gold, silver and jewelry which the Jesuits are said to have buried in Bolivia before their expulsion.

Just before the Jesuits were driven out of Bolivia they buried a vast amount of precious metal and gems, which they had accumulated by years of mining but which they were forbidden to ship away.

Spectacles for Racer

Race horses have been known to stumble at a crucial moment, losing their chance of victory and seriously impairing their value. It has been discovered that this tendency is not always due to faulty feet, but to defective vision. Recently, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, a well-known owner of "blue bloods" had a special pair of glasses made to fit a two-year-old afflicted with imperfect eyesight. The lenses were incased in a wide, comfortably fitting holder kept snugly in place with straps and bands. Marked improvement in the horse's performance was noted while wearing the glasses.

Child's Health Maintained By Wholesome Diet

Modern educators are leaning more each year to the old Greek idea of rearing the citizens of the future. They are working on the principle of "a sound mind in a sound body."

Good health is built primarily on the foundation of right food. The sort of food the child has determines to a large extent the fitness of the man or woman.

Children have to be taught to like the foods that are good for them much in the same way that they have to be taught arithmetic and history. Boys and girls are not born with any particular desire for cereals or for bread. It's up to their parents to see that they learn the rudiments of a balanced diet and the reason for such a diet. Firmness and patience are often necessary in the teaching, but the job must be done.

Many mothers unconsciously put their children under health handicaps by allowing them to use their own discretion in the matter of eating candy, fruit, nuts and cookies. By so doing they set a precedent in the matter of other foods and make the teaching of good nutrition harder.

One or two articles are not enough to supply a child's needs for a meal. In order that there be normal development, there must be variety.

Fresh eggs, whole cereals, fruits in season and leafy vegetables should occupy an important part in the growing child's dietary. Then, too, a certain amount of concentrated food is necessary for children, because rapid growth whets their appetites to a razor edge, so that they crave more food than their systems can well dispose of. Evaporated milk, diluted with orange juice as a drink, or in custards or other baked foods, is especially beneficial for the growing child for the reason that it is concentrated to double the richness of ordinary cow's milk and is entirely sterile as well. The can of evaporated milk solves the problem of obtaining perfectly pure milk, as well as the problem of lack of refrigeration facilities, since this type of milk will keep indefinitely in the can.

Bird Champion Sprinter

The speed of the pheasant is computed to be in the neighborhood of 15 or 18 miles an hour. When the college sprinter runs the 100-yard dash in ten seconds, he exceeds but slightly the time the bird makes in the much shorter runs. Considering that the stride of the average good sprinter is about eight feet or nearly eleven times that of the bird, the pheasant's performance stands as remarkable.—Detroit News.

"Oh! What makes you think such a thing?"

"A young teacher at William Penn school who is suspiciously ignorant of these United States and occasionally, when she isn't on her guard, falls into rather an English accent! She's supposed to be Sam Schwenckton's niece or cousin; she lives at his farm and her name is Schwenckton. But she's quite unlike the other county teachers. Rather distingue; a thoroughbred; the only teacher in the county that ventures to cheek me!" he grinned.

"Gracious. Don't let it make a prig of you, this job of superintending a lot of women teachers! It's enough to! I won't have you spoiled like that! But your suspicions—they seem rather fantastic, dear!"

"Yes," Marvin gave it up, "I suppose they do. May I see the photograph, please?"

Mrs. Creighton pointed to a book on the table behind the couch.

Holding a "cabinet-sized" photograph near the table lamp, he examined it eagerly. It was the face of a girl of fifteen; short, curly hair, fine features, a sensitive mouth, a serious, rather melancholy expression.

Undoubtedly there was a resemblance—the same wide-open innocent eyes and sensitive mouth. And yet it was not definite or strong enough to be unmistakable, by any means. He could not feel sure. Far from it. What resemblance there was might easily be a coincidence. This photograph gave no suggestion of that vivid sparkle of his young teacher's face, her gay riot of color, her charm. It looked rather insipid. And yet—

"Well?" asked his mother. "Of course it isn't your young teacher?"

"I can hardly tell—I'm not sure—"

"But is there any resemblance?" she asked incredulously.

"Yes," he answered hesitatingly. "Yes, there is. May I keep this?"

"Of course. But, Marvin, the thing is too impossible!"

"I suppose so. Look here, Mother, will you call on Miss Schwenckton and see what you think about her? Notice her accent. Sometimes she seems to me to be deliberately disguising it!"

"But, dear, what possible excuse could I give for calling on her? Wouldn't she and the Schwencktons think it very queer? I'd feel embarrassed!"

"But aside from my little suspicion, I'd like you to call on her just because she's so worth knowing. You'd find her a lot more your kind than that Quo Non Ascendus crowd!"

His mother's ears detected something in his voice, her swift glance saw something in his face, that caught her breath.

"All right, dear." Suddenly she turned to him and clasped his hand almost convulsively. "Oh, Marvin, dear, do you realize that if you took up with a county school teacher, a relative of Sam Schwenckton, that would be the last straw to your father! He'd never, never look at you again! Of course, I know that could not stop you if you loved—"

Marvin laughed. "Don't worry, dear! You're the only girl I've ever been in love with! What makes you imagine I'm going to 'take up' with Miss Schwenckton?"

"Now perhaps," she said ruefully as she noticed that his face had grown red, "I've just put it into your head!"

"Perhaps you have," he slowly answered. "Perhaps if she isn't our English cousin—"

"Which she surely isn't, dear! Living at the Schwenckton farm and teaching that school—Lady Sylvia St. Croix! Unthinkable!"

"Well, if she isn't—if she's just herself—she certainly is fetching! But if she's the something-more-than-meets-the-eye, that I half suspect, I wouldn't touch her with tongs!"

"But why? Isn't that unreasonable prejudice?"

"Not at all. If she's a tricky schemer, out after our money, she's not the sort of girl she seems to be—and it's only the sort of girl she seems to be that I might fall for—though I hasten to assure you I've no idea she'd fall for me!"

His mother laughed. She had never yet met the girl who, if given a chance, would not "fall for" either one of her fine sons. And, of course, with the additional lure of their millions, who could resist them? Surely not a county teacher of the Schwenckton breed!—though, of course, she must be, as Marvin insisted, far above her relatives or he could hardly find her so interesting and so presentable that he would ask his mother to call on her. Well, this certainly needed looking into! She would lose no time in calling on the young woman.

"I'm curious to know, Mother, how you'll size up Miss Schwenckton. Will you go to see her soon? On Monday?"

"What time will she be home from school?"

"School closes at four. By the way, to avoid the curiosity of the farmer's family, it might be better, perhaps, to call on her at her school just at closing time."

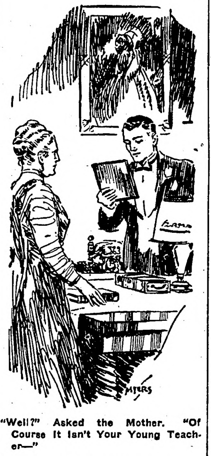
"I'll be glad to avoid the curiosity of the farmer's family," his mother assented.

So it seemed that our young school mistress was booked for something of a reception at her schoolhouse at four o'clock on Monday afternoon: Mr. Creighton plotting to visit her with the determination to bundle her out of the neighborhood, because he saw in her the final and strongest hindrance to his son's desirable marriage with Lady Sylvia St. Croix; Mrs. Creighton planning to discover, in the course of a friendly call, whether the girl were no other than she whom her husband desired as his elder son's bride, desiring it so urgently that he would stop at nothing to gain its fulfillment.

The stage was all set, it seemed, for a scene dramatic enough to satisfy even Meely's insatiable love of histrionics.

CHAPTER VIII

Meely's idea in addressing the county teachers on Saturday morning at their monthly institute was not so much to be instructive and pedagogical, as to be entertaining. So she chose for her subject "Shakespeare's Women." That title, while looking educational on the program would give her a chance to riot in a dramatic orgy—speeches of Lady Macbeth, Portia, Desdemona, Juliet—she would have the time of her life!



"Well?" Asked the Mother. "Of Course It Isn't Your Young Teacher—"

And as she would never see these women again she need not bother with her accent, which would be a great relief.

Meely had assured herself, before launching forth, that the superintendent was not present. And once she "got going," she was too transported from the world about her to notice, towards the end of the session while she was giving "the balcony scene," that Mr. Creighton had slipped unobtrusively and quite noiselessly into a back seat.

When, therefore, the meeting being over and she putting on her wraps, she suddenly saw him coming toward her across the length of the room, she was startled and rather perturbed.

"I've got my roadster out here—I'll drive you home," he stated.

She did not quite fancy this form of address; why didn't he ask her whether he might drive her home?

"Oh, I won't trouble you; the trolley will take me nearly all the way," she lightly dismissed him.

"But my roadster will take you the whole way."

"Thank you, no."

"But why?" he asked, surprised.

"I'm not going home. I think I'll go in to Sunbury and treat myself to a hotel meal and a cinema—movie," she hastily corrected herself.

"Good! I'm going to Sunbury myself. Have lunch with me, will you? I'll even go to see a—cinema—with you!"

In her pleased surprise at such a jolly invitation (for to be in Marvin Creighton's company was rather perilously exciting and Meely was lonely) she dropped her cool manner with rather startling suddenness and assented with childish delight.

The day was clear, the air delicious, the roads in good condition. Marvin's car delightfully easy and comfortable; and Meely, freed from school-room drudgery and, for the first time in weeks, from the atmosphere of the Schwenckton household, felt a sudden hilarious gayety, a tingling in her blood, such as she had not experienced since she had undertaken the serious profession of the teacher.

"Oh!" she laughed gleefully, fairly bouncing in her seat, "what a lark! It makes me feel young again!"

"Me, too!" responded Marvin, his eyes snapping. "Pedagogy could dry one up at the roots, couldn't it?—if," he conscientiously added, "one didn't fight to keep it a living thing."

"I try not to take it too seriously," said Meely.

"A shockingly imprudent thing to admit to your superintendent! I suppose," he remarked ironically, "you look upon your work merely as a stepping-stone to something else?"

"Oh, dear, yes! I don't expect to be a school teacher all my days! Gracious!"

"A stepping-stone to marriage, I suppose?"

"What a good guesser you are! But why be high-hat about that? Woman's place is in the home, isn't it?"

"It's not been for the past ten years. You are a back number!"

"You surprise me. I thought I was ahead of my times, because," she said with sad conviction, "I'm sure I couldn't make any man happy if I had to do his housewor-r-k."

"Will you tell me," he inquired in a tone of dulcet gentleness, "why you adopt a Pennsylvania accent when you talk to me and an English accent when you recite Shakespeare?"

"Oh," she lightly responded, "that's just my platform manner—I've acted quite a bit—"

"Professionally?" he demanded, startled.

"Both in private theatricals and professionally."

"What, then, made you ever turn to teaching?"

"Working my way to Hollywood."

Marvin looked rather staggered, for this knocked out his suspicion as to who she was and put a very wet blanket indeed upon a hope he was half consciously cherishing.

"Do you think," he asked somewhat stiffly, "it's right to use our schools as a stepping-stone for your ambitions?"

"I'd use every school in this county for my ambition if I'd the chance to! —and all the trustees and even the superintendent himself. Now throw me out of your car! Take my job from me if you think me base and unprincipled! I don't care! I've nearly enough money saved anyway to get to Hollywood. Anyway, I believe I could get there sooner by cooking my way out—cooks earn so much more than college presidents in America!"

"Do your parents uphold you in this ambition of yours?"

"Now you are a back number!—parents' influence having passed out eleven years ago."

"Your parents are living?"

"Yes."

"Where?"

A perceptible pause. "Reading, Pennsylvania."

"Any brothers and sisters?"

"No—my only brother was killed in the World war and—" She stopped short; she had spoken impulsively; Marvin wondered whether emotion for her slaughtered brother—or something else—had checked so abruptly her statement of a coincidence.

He would test her a bit. "That's odd," he remarked. "I have an English cousin whose only son was killed in the World war and his only other child is a daughter about your age!"

"What's odd about it?"

"Rather a coincidence, don't you think?"

"Why, no. There must have been thousands of such coincidences, surely."

Gretna Green Unlike Town of Olden Days

The big increase in the surplus of English women, as indicated in recent census returns, has robbed Gretna Green (Scotland) of hopes of staging a comeback. The good old days of romance are gone forever, aver the townsfolk.

Daughters were far more scarce a hundred years or so ago than now when parents so rarely try to shoot any young sports who purloin them. Gretna Green did most of its rushing marriage business between 1754 and 1856.

One of the popular paintings is that of romantic passengers in a post-chaise hurrying to the town on the boundary line between England and Scotland and showing the pursuing father's vehicle in a ditch with the wheel broken down.

This picture is more in demand than the village blacksmith himself who used to lend a helping hand to parties bent on clandestine marriage to avoid the English law.

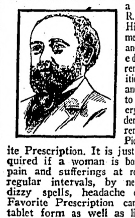
A Benefactor



A physician who reaches out to benefit humanity leaves a record behind him that is worth while. Such a man was Dr. R. V. Pierce. His study along medical lines, and his knowledge of the remedial qualities of herbs and plants led to the discovery of his wonderful herbal remedy, Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is just the tonic required if a woman is borne down by pain and sufferings at regular or irregular intervals, by nervousness or dizzy spells, headache or backache. Sport Circles Take to Bows and Arrows

The famous old pastime of archery, which has been undergoing a revival not only in England but in this country, promises this year to enjoy a further popularity. Many London hostesses of last year included it in their morning recreation in Regent's park or Kew gardens, while in the United States, where the sport was promoted by Maurice Thompson in 1878 and revived in 1913, it is estimated that no less than 2,000 college girls are taking their bow and arrow shooting seriously.

Before the invention of gunpowder no country had been discovered in which the bow was not the chief weapon for hunting and war. It lasted longest in the Americas, where it was the main arm from Patagonia to the Arctic circle. In the 1780s in England the art of the bow and arrow became the favorite national pastime, and the Toxophilic society then formed still carries on. Before tennis and later golf ushered in the era of more vigorous sport the bow and arrow reigned almost supreme.

One Asiatic Invasion Not Cause of Alarm

Evidences of a new Asiatic invasion has been brought to Los Angeles by fishermen in the form of Sardinia Melanosticta, known in Japan as "iasshi," otherwise the Japanese sardine, whose native haunts are the warm waters of the Indian ocean.

The tiny fish, similar to the California sardine, or Sardinia Caerulea, except that they are longer and of distinct streamland design, are believed to have migrated past Java head up to the Japan sea, thence across the Pacific in the warm Japanese current to the Aleutian islands, and finally down the Pacific coast to southern California waters.

The 15,000-mile trip of the Sardinia Melanosticta has no precedents in Pacific fishing history, veteran fishermen declare, except in that of the Japanese tuna, or "maguro," which for several years have been found in limited numbers off the California coast.

To Honor Scottish Heroes

Edinburgh, Scotland, is to have statues of Wallace and Bruce, the Scottish heroes. They will cost nearly $35,000, and $1,700 a year has been set aside for their upkeep. A statue of each hero will be placed on the castle wall on the side of the gateway looking down the Esplanade. The Wallace figure was designed by Alexander Carrie, A. R. S. A., Edinburgh, and that of Bruce by Thomas J. Capperton of London.

Slipper Statistics.

While Turkey may have the reputation of being the home of the comfortable Turkish slippers, Czechoslovakia so far this year has sold Uncle Sam almost twice as many pairs as has Turkey. Some 101,020 pairs found their way to American feet, while Turkey sent over only 63,014 pairs.

Figs Grown in Capital

A fig tree is growing in the front yard of Mrs. Margaret Donohoe at 3822 Fifth street, Washington, D. C. It is 30 feet high, and its fruit is sweet and of good size, some of it measuring more than two inches in diameter. Last year the tree bore 150 dozen figs and this year the yield is estimated to be about 200 dozen. The tree was brought as a fig branch from Italy seven years ago, and two years later began to bear fruit.

SING

by Anton Romatka

Don't stop to ask the reason why
Of rainy day or cloudy sky,
Of sullen mood, or hidden tears,
Of envy, hatred, sins, and fears;
But throw your little cares away
And often sing and dance and play.
In under- and in over-tone
Voice all the feelingsyou have known;
And let a lyric cadence roll
From sacred depths within your soul.
In minor and in major key
Sing all your songs of woe or glee,
In measure quick or measure slow
Let all your passions overflow;
And mingle deep your vocal strain
With joy and laughter, tears and pain.
Let all your deep emotions ring
In songs that only you can sing.

To Reopen Creamery At Strandquist

We noticed an item in the Strandquist Press for last week, that that villige will soon enjoy the reopening of their creamery there. A party from Oklee has taken over the property and will try his luck at the business. According to the Press they are all wishing him good luck and they hope he will succeed. Well to help the folks up there along we down here also send our best wish for their success.

We do hope that the farmers in Strandquist will realize what an institution like a creamery will mean to their town and community, and that they will support it so that it can operate on a twelve month run. A good up-to-the-minute creamery is considered as the backbone of a community where dairying is done on a big scale.

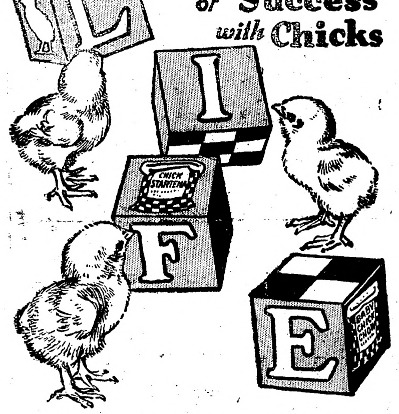
Fuchsia's High Place

The fuchsia is one of the gardener's most valuable plants, not only for the beauty of its flowers and graceful form of the plant but also because it is adaptable to flower beds and borders and grows with such freedom and such little care.



ONLY 50% of chicks fed an average ration live. When fed properly, at least 90% can be saved. Chicks need a feed to give them warmth, strength, energy and vitamins for life and growth. This is the reason 1592 hatcheries say feed Purina Chick Startena, the buttermilk starting ration which contains Cod Liver Oil. We will be glad to tell you of a feeding plan that is as simple as A B C. You'll be chicks ahead, money ahead. Come in.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XX

SAVE FERTILITY: The Northwest is beginning to buy commercial fertilizers. In the East and South fertilizers are about as necessary as seed for growing a crop. Such a condition can be avoided here through growing more clover and alsalfa that enriches the soil and thru saving manure.

Thousands of tons of fertility are lost every year on the farms through the manure pile standing at the barn until rain and heating carries away much of its value. More farmers are hauling manure direct from the barn to the field each year. It saves fertility and requires less labor. It makes the barnyard much more sanitary. Manure piles are the most prolific breeding places for flies and flies are detrimental to dairying.

A top dressing of manure either before or after seeding greatly helps the growth of clover and alfalfa. It greatly increases the growth of pasture land. There is no day throughout the year but what manure can be applied to some part of the farm with profitable results.

First 24 Hours of Life Baby's Hardest Time

By MARIE K. JOHNSON

Marie K. Johnson

Undernourishment is one of the most common of the causes of infant mortality, according to a survey recently undertaken in Chicago. Statistics show that of 4,522 babies under one year of age that died in 12 months, 988 died in the first 24 hours.

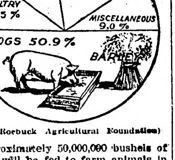
Eight hundred and seventy-six died in the first six days, exclusive of the first 24 hours, and 1,798 died from the seventh day to the sixth month. Eight hundred and sixty died in the last six months of the year. The survey indicated that a surprisingly large number of infants are artifically fed, which condition, doctors agree, had a marked bearing on their undernourished conditions. Naturally, no one food may prove satisfactory in every case, although the survey showed that evaporated milk in many cases had proved an excellent substitute for mother's milk. This may be explained by reason of the fact that evaporated milk is simply pure, concentrated cow's milk from which 60 per cent of the water has been removed. It contains practically every element necessary for good health and is consequently an excellent builder of bone and tissue.

Although authorities on health recommend evaporated milk as a baby food, like other substitutes for the natural supply, it should not be considered as a food complete in itself. Addition of orange or tomato juice, barley water or lime water is important in providing adequate diet for the infant.

For babies, milk of dependable purity is essential. Market milk will not keep for any length of time and is also liable to contamination, especially in hot weather, while evaporated milk, hermetically sealed in sterilized containers, remains as fresh and pure as on the day it was canned.

Sterility in evaporated milk, authorities agree, is one of the most important points in its favor. In processing, evaporated milk is subjected to 240 degrees heat for a half hour, thereby removing all possibility of bacterial life being present in the milk. Heat is the only preservative for this type of milk and the heat has the further beneficial effect of making the curds of milk more flocculent and easier to digest.

Hogs Get Barley Diet



(Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation)

Approximately 50,000,000 bushels of barley will be fed to farm animals in the United States this year if the present crop outlook is fulfilled. Of this amount a trifle over one-half, or 50.9%, according to the figures compiled by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, is consumed by hogs. Next to them, horses eat the most barley, or 17.7% of all barley fed to farm animals. Then 11.9% is fed to cattle, mostly to dairy cows in the form of barley chop. Farm poultry flocks get away with another 10.5%, leaving 9% to be fed to sheep and used for miscellaneous feed purposes. Barley is the chief competitor of corn as live-stock feed and is especially important in the northern corn belt and Pacific coast states, according to the Foundation's experts.

Big Play Coming Here Tomorrow Night

The American Legion and Auxiliary of Middle River will come here tomorrow night (Saturday) to put on a big show. They will present a comedy drama in three big acts, called A Little Clodhopper. It is one of the best plays that are put on the stage today, and according to reports will be one well worth seeing.

The Gatzke playmakers whom put on the play "An Arizona Cowbow", here last Saturday evening, can be spoken of as the best that have played here for some time. There was only one thing lacking and that was room for all of the crowd that came in to see the show. The hall was filled to capacity and all enjoyed a good time.

Unblocking in Dummy

BID and play the following hand as you think should be done and then compare it with what follows:

North:
♠—10, 7, 6, 5, 4
♡—0
◇—A, K
♣—K, J, 9, 7, 4, 3

West:
♠—K, Q, J, 9, 8
♡—10, 7, 5, 4
◇—8, 7, 3, 2
♣—0

East:
♠—3, 2
♡—J, 9, 8, 6, 3, 2
◇—5, 4
♣—A, Q, 10

South:
♠—A
♡—A, K, Q
◇—Q, J, 10, 9, 6
♣—8, 6, 5, 2

South deals and bids one no trump. West passes. North, having a two-suiter, should take out his partner's no trump with his higher suit. Therefore he bids two spades, East passes, and South, considering a major take-out to be from strength, bids two no trump. West passes again. When the holder of a two-suiter takes out his partner's no trump and his partner rebids, a second take-out with the other suit should be made; therefore North says three clubs. East passes and South decides to go on with his no trump in spite of his partner's two-suiter, because of his singleton in spades and the fact that his partner's other suit is a minor. He has four sure tricks and his diamond suit is such that it seems certain of establishment and good for three tricks.

He bids three no trump and all pass. West leads the King of spades, dummy is spread on the table and declarer examines the hands. Dummy's Ace and King of diamonds block that suit in his own hand, and if he leads diamonds at trick 2 he cannot get the lead back to his own hand because dummy is void of hearts and the commanding clubs and spades of the adversaries would prevent his making his contract. He discovers a way of overcoming the difficulty and plays the hand as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	SK	S4	S2	SA
2	H4	DK	H2	HA
3	H5	DA	H3	HK
4	D2	S5	D4	DQ
5	D3	C3	D5	DJ
6	D7	C4	H6	D10
7	D8	C7	H8	D9
8	H7	C9	H9	D6
9	H10	CJ	HJ	HQ
10	S8	CK	CA	C2
11	S9	S6	CQ	C5
12	SJ	S7	C10	C6
13	SQ	S10	S3	C8

Declarer wins three odd tricks.

This is a rather remarkable hand as far as discarding is concerned. Not only does declarer make the unusual discards of an Ace and King, but he governs his later play by watching the discards of his adversaries. He retains his Queen of hearts until he has run his five diamonds, hoping that it may seem safe to put the adversaries in the lead with clubs, and wait for them to come back in hearts. If East had thrown away his small spade, hoping to make his hearts this scheme would have worked, but East knew that declarer still held the Queen of hearts and also that he, East, must hold a spade to lead to his partner.

Discarding on these diamond tricks really did more harm to declarer than to the adversaries. He could not keep sufficient protection for the spades in dummy without reducing his club holding to the King, Jack, and to have led clubs then would have given the adversaries all of their remaining clubs; thus at trick 9 declarer saw that he must take his Queen of hearts or lose his contract and game. Any attempt to play this hand without discarding the two high diamonds will give adversaries five tricks and prevent declarer going game.

One particular situation where instruction regarding discarding seems to be necessary is where an adversary is compelled to discard upon leads from dummy at no trump. This adversary has, for instance, the Ace and two small hearts and a number of small clubs and diamonds which are not good cards, and declarer is leading spades from dummy where in addition to spades there are only hearts —the King, Queen and several small ones. It would seem to be self-evident that this adversary should discard small hearts and keep anything else, because if he discards his clubs and diamonds he will be compelled, when dummy leads a heart to win the trick and lead right back to the high hearts which are on the table.

To put this into the form of a rule: "When holding Ace and others of a suit where King and perhaps Queen also are in dummy, if you have an opportunity to discard, throw away all of that suit except the Ace, so that when your ace wins you will not be obliged to lead right back in the same suit."

Can't Kill Stuffed Bird

The Snake Meadow club near Danielson, Conn., has a lifelike stuffed heron mounted on a clump of alders on the club's hunting grounds. Members get the price of their membership back every time they watch visiting sportsmen shoot at that stuffed bird. Spying the spurious heron the visitor crouches all athrill to get out of sight. Then he sneaks up within gun range, blazes away and makes a dash for his game. The look on his face when he sees the bird still on its perch provokes loud guffaws from his hosts hiding behind nearby bushes. That clears up the mystery.—Capper's Weekly.

Cissy on the Snowslide

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

MARTIN BRIGGS built the long snowslide that led from the top of Hooper's hill way down to the village stores. Martin had conceived the idea of the snowslide and twenty-five small companions had helped him. Unknown to any of their elders, on the night before the big freeze, they had pumped water from somebody's barn well and poured it over the hard-packed snow.

They said that when Mr. Hooper, the postmaster who lived at the top of the hill, came out of his gate the next morning prepared for a crisp walk to the post office, he sat down on the slide and swiftly and surely went directly to his office door, where friends picked him up to find him more angry than hurt.

It was on that first morning that Miss Cissy Plumb decided to take her hat to the milliner's and have it retrimmed. Miss Cissy was not so old and not so young. She was pretty and slender and her hair was soft and black. She lived alone in a tiny cottage near Hooper's place, and as she started on her morning walk to the milliner's she was thinking about Andrew Bellew who had brought her some pretty large apples the night before.

"Cissy," Andrew had said, "you are all alone and I am all alone—we could be very contented and happy if we married."

"You mean married each other?" demanded Miss Cissy.

"Of course," said practical Andrew. "You know I always liked you best of all the girls, Cissy."

"One reason that I've never married," said Miss Cissy plainly, "is because I have never met the man I could love." She emphasized the word love so that it sounded very large and important.

"If it was me you liked—" began Andrew humbly when Miss Cissy interrupted.

"I said 'love,' Andrew, not just plain like! I can like most anybody!"

"Of course, Cissy," said Andrew rumpling up his brown hair, "you must have known that I meant 'love,' now didn't you?"

But Cissy refused to answer that question. She thanked Andrew again for the apples, and he went home, walking down the middle of the road because the snow was crunchy there. The sidewalk was wet and sloppy.

It was after his departure that Cissy began to plan about her hat. She tried it on and was sure that it was unbecoming, so she had the thought about taking it to the milliner the very next morning.

"Poor Andrew does not understand women," thought Miss Cissy when her light was out, but she went to sleep with a smile on her lips.

Next morning, after her small household was in order, she took her hat box and started down the sidewalk to go to Eva Frame, the milliner. Miss Cissy wore her best fur coat, no hat and a pair of snug-fitting high arctics. She did not notice the slide!

Immediately it claimed her attention, for her rubber-soled arctic refused to stick to the icy surface, one hand flung forward and the other back, and the latter dropped the hat box just where Miss Cissy could sit plumply down on it, which she did promptly. She started down the slide, gaining speed—faster and faster she flew. Women looked out of door or window and said:

"Land sakes, see Cissy Plumb sliding down hill—you'd think she was some young flapper!"

Once Cissy screamed faintly when Mr. Hall was backing out his motor car, but he heard the cry and stopped in time. Then she was so far along that she thought of what the end might be—the post office and the morning crowd of men and women and children—laughing at her—Miss Cissy Plumb!

What would Andrew Bellew think when he saw her? Would he ever want to marry her? And just then she saw Andrew standing by his large open gate. He was peering up the hill at her—at Cissy Plumb of the highly respected Plumb family—sliding down like any common boy—and she glanced despairingly at him as she came and he was sure that she called, "Andrew, save me!"

He saved her.

Andrew Bellew jumped out on the slide and held out his arms to stop her flight. So it happened that Miss Cissy Plumb, sitting on her best hat in its squashed box, slid around a curving track straight into Andrew Bellew's dooryard. She jumped to her feet and Andrew brushed off her coat and told her it wasn't hurt a bit. Then he silently handed her the flat band box.

"I was on my way to the milliner's," explained Miss Cissy primly.

"So I see," said Andrew glumly.

"I thought if I was going to be married I ought to have a new hat," said Miss Cissy, blushing furiously.

"You didn't tell me that last night," said Andrew after awhile.

"I've just discovered that I need you—somebody to look out for me," said Cissy demurely.

"Come into my house," said Andrew authoritatively. "Aunt Hester will give you a drink of cordial—you need it, Cissy—and there's a ring I bought 15 years ago when I first made up my mind to marry you."

Jilted, 54, Makes Ex-Wooer, 82, Pay

London.—Even eighty-two-year-old Romeos may write endearing letters to fifty-four-year-old Juliets. They can also be forced to pay damages for not living up to their promise of marriage.

This was demonstrated when James Robinson was haled before a local court and ordered to pay $250 damages to Miss Margaret Thomason for failure to fulfill a promise of marriage.

The aged wooer gave Miss Thomason snowdrops in the spring and roses in the fall for many years. He also provided her with a diamond and ruby engagement ring and carried chocolates to her regularly on Sunday when he went to take her to morning service.

He promised to marry her when he could sell his land in Alberta, so Miss Thomason explained in court, but finally ceased to pay her attention on the plea that he could not afford to marry.

PUNCHES SHERIFF IN KANSAS COURT

Lawyer Resents Being Called Liar by Official.

Jefferson City, Mo.—An uproar was created in the Circuit court here recently when H. P. Lauf, Jefferson City lawyer, slapped the face of L. C. Withaup, Cole county sheriff, after the latter called him a liar.

Sheriff Withaup recently was fined $500 and sentenced to 30 days in jail by Federal Judge A. L. Reeves of Kansas City in Federal court here on a charge of coddling federal prisoners. Sentence was stayed pending good behavior.

Lauf was arguing a motion before Judge Henry J. Westhues in which he sought to compel the sheriff to return a diamond ring, valued at $1,500, which Mike Miongian, charged with forgery, is alleged to have presented to the officer. Lauf declared that when an officer accepted a gift of such value from a prisoner he was presumed under the law to have accepted a bribe.

Withaup jumped to his feet. "You're a liar," he shouted.

Lauf walked from the attorney's table to the side of the sheriff and slapped him.

Judge Westhues reprimanded Withaup.

The ring over which the suit was brought is in possession of W. C. Cowan and Sam Bushman, lawyers, taken as part payment of their fee for defending the sheriff on the charge of coddling prisoners.

Miongian in his suit alleged he gave the sheriff the ring for safekeeping, but Withaup said he was given the ring for his kind treatment of the prisoner.

Rescued From Ice Cake 12 Miles Out in Lake

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—Carried on a cake of ice a dozen miles into Lake Huron, Peter Paquin, a fisherman, is alive, due to the heroism of his friends.

Paquin and Jack Vizenau were fishing some distance from shore when the ice on which the former was standing broke away and started downstream. Vizenau hurried to Prentiss bay, five miles away, to obtain a boat, but found there was none there. He then telephoned a lumber camp at Cedarville, where George Dunn and Robert Hammel were told of Paquin's plight.

Dunn and Hammel obtained a boat and a horse to drag it two miles to open water and then were forced to spend two hours before they could get the motor started. They set out into the lake while virtually all the inhabitants of Cedarville anxiously lined the shore. After several hours' search they finally located Paquin on the two-acre cake of ice and brought him ashore.

Quick-Witted Operator Thwarted Burglar Gang

Mt. Clemens, Mich.—Through the prompt action of Miss Elsie Peltier, toll night operator here, a bold attempt to loot Prieh's Mercantile company at this place was thwarted. Just before dawn Miss Peltier, who was on duty at the time, heard a car drive past the central office and stop a short distance away. That being a rather unusual hour for anyone to be astir, she went to the window to see what was happening. The actions of four men in the car aroused her suspicion and she notified police officials. Her suspicions were well founded, as upon investigation it was found that the back and side doors of the building had been "jimmied" and one of the transom windows had been broken. Two of the suspects were captured, while the others made their escape in the automobile.

Knee Bones Said to Tell Age of Mummies

The age of a mummy 3,000 years old can be determined by the condition of the bones in the knee, according to T. Wingate Todd of the department of anatomy, Western Reserve university.

"Ages up to twenty-seven may be determined with great accuracy by an examination of the skeleton," Todd said. "From that age up to fifty errors may run as high as three years and from fifty to seventy, accuracy is limited to a five-year period."

Knee joints, he declared, compose one of the most accurate indicators of age.

Todd gave the ages of twenty-three, forty-two, and seventy-two years as the most dangerous ages in a man's life. These years, he explained, are the peaks at which death is likely from ailments to which men are most susceptible at the different periods of their lives.

Fifty Years on Book

The first installment of the new French dictionary, prepared under the auspices of the French government, is about to be issued after fifty years of work. The task of compiling this great work is done under the supervision of the nation's forty immortals to whom it was assigned nearly three centuries ago. These persons jealously guard the admission of new words into the book and they receive official sanction after profound consideration because they feel that it is their task to keep the language pure. Only about 2,500 new words are put into this new edition and many words in common use are excluded for one reason or another.

New Rubber Source

That the euphorbia tree, heretofore considered as merely a bearer of latex and resins, will produce rubber, is the claim of a German chemist. He says that by his process three gallons of a latex having a high rubber content were extracted from 20 trees in two hours. A by-product of resins suitable for varnishes was also found. Samples of the rubber were sent to this country and England recently. The tree is prolific in southern Africa.

—19—

"My cousin is a baronet, Sir John St. Croix, and his son's death left no heir to his title; so that it would have died out with him, but that the king conferred on his daughter, Sylvia, the title of baroness and the right of continuance of the title in direct line, so that her oldest son will bear the title of baron."

As Marvin stated these facts, his efforts to watch his companion's face rendered his driving rather eccentric.

"Oh," she exclaimed, "is that the English titled lady they say around here you refuse to marry?"

Nothing could have been more impersonal than her tone—though he noted that her cheeks were flushed.

"Has that gossip reached you?"

"Couldn't have dodged it!" she smiled.

"By the way, I believe you told me, the first time I met you, didn't you, that you'd been 'jilted'?"

"Only once."

"What for?"

"That's what I'd like to know! Can you understand a man's deliberately and of his own free will and choice losing the chance to annex me for life? Why," she abruptly inquired, "did you jilt your cousin, that baroness?"

"I didn't. I was never really engaged to her. Our parents had a sort of understanding—"

"Did the noble lady fall in with it?"

"I never heard that she objected."

"Then don't you think you rather let her down?"

"Not so much, in my opinion, as a mariage de convenance would let her down! Anyway, my brother, whom she'll probably find much more to her taste, is going to marry her."

"Is he?"

"If she'll have him."

"And you think she will like him better than you?"

"If you'd ever met him you wouldn't ask!"

"Oh, why?"

"He's a ladies' man—has prettier manners than I have and better clothes."

"Some girls don't care for 'a ladies' man.'"

"Well, if she turns him down I might begin to be interested in her myself."

"Why?"

"If she could be so disinterested. My brother has a big income from my father. I have only what I earn."

"You haven't a very high opinion of girls, have you?"

"What makes you think so?"

"You seem to think they've no sense —preferring manners and clothes to —a man!"

Marvin felt a tingling sensation along his arm that made it difficult for him to keep his hand on the wheel, such an urgent pull was on it to snatch her to him and kiss the lips that paid him such a tribute; he was not used to compliments from girls—because he was not used to girls at all.

But the necessity, at this moment, of finding a parking spot in front of Sunbury's best hotel prevented his replying.

"I've been wondering," Meely said, as their waiter arrived with oysters, "are you going to make this educational job your life work, Mr. Creighton? Or are you 'using it as a stepping-stone' to other ambitions?" she wickedly suggested.

"Have you any idea," he seriously replied, "how hard it is to find a job an honest man can do? Pledge yourself to absolute honesty in this world and you'll starve to death or rot in jail! Public school positions are political jobs controlled by a bunch of exploiters. Show me one profession or business in which a man can be entirely honest. The church? It is to smile! —ask any pastor! Journalism? Ask John Swinton, one of America's most beloved journalists. Medicine? Read 'Arrowsmith!' The law? Ask Judge Lindsey! Teaching? Ask Scott Nearing!"

"Well, what is one to do about it?"

"Darned if I see any solution for a fellow that was born with a twist like mine!"

"Most people born to great riches as you've been, certainly are not troubled with your difficulties, Mr. Creighton! I've always been poor, so I can't quite feel your plight."

"All my life I've felt bitterly the hoggishness of our family's living in luxury on the labor of others who live on the ragged edge of poverty."

"You take life as seriously as I did at sixteen! Grow up and be a cynic like me, then you'll be happy, though rich. Can it matter to the vast universe how we worms on this tiny earth behave?"

"Not to the vast universe—but to us while we're here. Got to have traffic laws, you know, unless you can get off the high road to a road no one else uses; where, of course, you'd have a right to drive yourself to death if you wanted to. But can you find such a road? Can you—"

His voice trailed off into silence as he sat staring at her absently; for while he had been talking he had become conscious, as he looked at her, of seeing a face within a face—the childish face of that photograph of his English cousin looking out at him from the mature, intelligent countenance of this young woman.

That photograph was at this moment in his inside breast pocket. An almost irresistible temptation seized him to take it out and compare it with the living face before his eyes. Or to suddenly confront her with it and note the effect.

"Why on earth do you keep staring at me like that?" she inquired in astonishment.

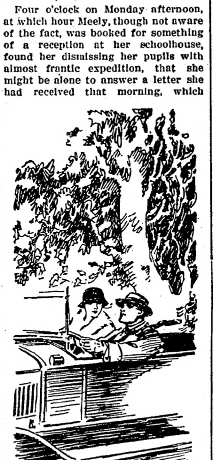
He came to himself with a short laugh. "Well, I've seen worse chromos than your face!"

"Oh, don't be so impersonal!"

They laughed gayly as, having finished their luncheon, they rose to go out to their waiting car.

CHAPTER IX

Four o'clock on Monday afternoon, at which hour Meely, though not aware of the fact, was booked for something of a reception at her schoolhouse, found her dismissing her pupils with almost frantic expedition, that she might be alone to answer a letter she had received that morning, which cried, or rather shrieked, for an answer; and not a moment had she had all day to write it. Her mother was in need—distressing need—her own dear mother! So, the little sum which, in the few months of teaching, she had amassed toward her trip to Hollywood, must be sacrificed and the trip indefinitely postponed.



Marvin Felt a Tingling Sensation Along His Arm That Made It Difficult for Him to Keep His Hand on the Wheel.

She had been writing rapidly for only a few minutes, however, when her ear was caught by the sound of a car stopping outside the schoolhouse.

Marvin Creighton? Even he was unwelcome while her letter remained unwritten—and she would have to tell him so.

A knock on the door which one could not have called hesitating. It was, on the contrary, peremptory. Followed immediately by the entrance of an elderly, ruddy-faced, white-haired man who seemed, on sight, an anachronism in this schoolroom, for Meely saw at once that he was a prosperous-looking gentleman of a rather courtly bearing. Not one of the school trustees—she had met them all. Not the father of one of her Pennsylvania Dutch pupils—this was a man of the town. Suddenly her heart began to beat faster. No one else about here could possibly look like this except—yes, it must be—the elder Mr. Creighton!

What on earth did he want?

He came to the platform and, as she rose, he held out his hand. His manner, though courteous, was distant, and his countenance grave and rather forbidding.

"This is Miss Schwenckton?"

"Yes?" she said interrogatively.

"Mr. Creighton," he introduced himself. "I'm glad I find you still here; I was afraid you would have gone."

"You wanted to see me?" was her rather superfluous question. Her heart was quaking and she made a desperate effort to get herself in hand. The man looked formidable!

Drawing a chair to the desk, he motioned her to be seated and sat down beside her.

"I am planning a little gift to this school, Miss Schwenckton. A Christmas gift. Electric lights. I wanted to ask you when the men can work in here without interfering with you?"

She placed a blotter over her letter, which lay under his very eyes. She did not believe this electric light stuff; he needed an excuse to come here to see her. What for?

"The schoolhouse is empty every day after four," she replied, "and all day Saturday."

"Any day after four?" he reflected. "The schoolhouse is always empty after four?"

"Today is an exception. I stopped to write a letter."

"Ah, to write a letter?" he repeated, and she heard the skepticism in his tone. "Then you're not in the habit of receiving visitors after school hours?"

"You're my first."

"Now you surprise me! I was under the impression that—er—my son sometimes visited you here after school hours!"

He looked so coldly disapproving as he spoke that Meely never for an instant supposed he referred to his elder son, whose visits, being strictly professional, would, of course, be beyond criticism. It must be that some garbled rumor of her intimacy with St. Croix had reached the man and he was here today to put a stop to it! But how exciting! What would he do about it? Try to bribe her, buy her off? Oh, surely that sort of thing was only a "movie" device, it didn't really happen; she had never in the whole course of her life met any one who had "bought off" any one or who had been "bought off." If only she could have known he was coming, she would have made up for the part; rouged and powdered like a real "tough"; enhanced her price as a menace to St. Croix. Why, she could have made herself look so dangerous Mr. Creighton would have paid anything to be rid of her—enough to finance her needy family for a year perhaps, while she worked herself in at Hollywood. But the way she was looking just now, he must be finding her perplexing. That was why, probably, he seemed so dazed; he had heard she was a common little hussy and he found her looking respectable; as respectable as his own wife!

Mr. Creighton was indeed feeling as dazed as he looked—for hadn't St. Croix told him that the girl was illiterate, vulgar, talked the dialect of the county?—and here was a girl who looked not only like a lady, but whose sophisticated bearing and perfectly good English so astonished him that for the moment he was disconcerted; a sensation to which he was, for the most part, a stranger. The bare idea of suggesting to her that he would buy her off, pay her to go away, turned him cold. He had no least difficulty in understanding Marvin's "falling for" her.

"I'm not mistaken, am I, in taking you for the teacher?" he asked.

"I'm the noble martyr," she admitted. "Don't I look it?"

He checked the gallant retort which rose involuntarily to his lips; he'd spoil everything if he didn't watch himself—the girl was fetching.

Their attention was caught at this instant by the noise of another motor stopping before the schoolhouse.

Meely thought with a thrill, "What a situation if Marvin walks in here and finds his father warning me off St. Croix! Oh, cricky!"

She was puzzled by the accusing look with which Mr. Creighton was regarding her—did he think it was St. Croix' car out there?—and she had just denied that she ever had visitors here at her school! No wonder he looked at her accusingly!

Made Arrow Complete Its Destined Course

In the mountain province of Luzon, Philippine Islands, where the Igorots and Ifugaos and Kalingas live by primal laws duplicated in the Old Testament of the Bible, but modified by Christ's philosophy in the New, a journeying missionary priest recently was shot in the back with an arrow. He turned back trying to discover his hidden assailant, and when the young man in the bushes found out that he was a priest, he came and knelt before him and begged heavenly pardon. There was a feud on, he explained, and he had thought the priest an enemy; in the dusk of late twilight he had not recognized the priest's garb. All right, but how could they get the arrow out of the priest's back? Oh, that would be very easy and would not hurt much; so the young mountaineer stepped behind the priest, cut the feather-end off the arrow and jammed the point on through the priest's body; and then he stepped around in front and pulled the arrow out. The wound healed soon enough, no vital organs having been scotched.—Exchange.

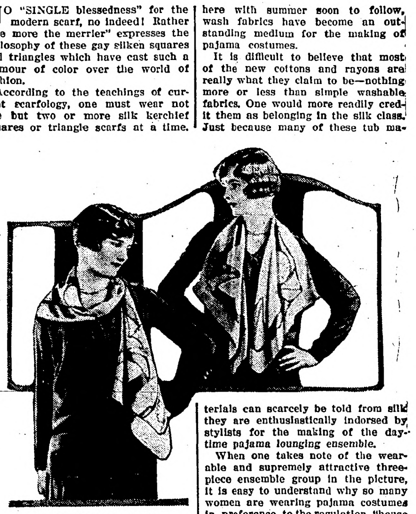
Not Altogether Aged

There is a woman in our neighborhood who is eighty years of age, but who walks with an erectness and springiness that is the envy of women many years younger than she. The other day my young daughter saw her pass, and, turning to me she said: "Mother, her face is much older than her legs, don't you think?"—Exchange.

EXOTIC SCARFS FOR SPRING; LOUNGING PAJAMA COSTUMES

NO "SINGLE blessedness" for the modern scarf, no indeed! Rather "the more the merrier" expresses the philosophy of these gay silken squares and triangles which have cast such a glamour of color over the world of fashion.

According to the teachings of current scarfology, one must wear not one but two or more silk kerchief squares or triangle scarfs at a time. Which sounds a bit extreme, that is, before one has acquired the knack.



FEATURE FOR SPRING

That is why the young woman posed for the photographs reproduced in this picture—to "tell the world" of the latest way to arrange twin scarfs. If two exotic scarfs be posed one about the neckline the other as a jabot, as shown to the left in the illustration they will prove absolutely transforming to even the most sedate of frocks. The experiment is worth trying. Don the black dress which was never quite becoming or the hopeless brown or dull gray which you bought in a moment of abstraction, adjust two scarfs with that debonair displayed in either of the accompanying pictures, then await the comments of your friends. Such music will greet the ears as "how here with summer soon to follow, wash fabrics have become an outstanding medium for the making of pajama costumes.

It is difficult to believe that most of the new cottons and rayons are really what they claim to be—nothing more or less than simple washable fabrics. One would more readily credit them as belonging in the silk class. Just because many of these tub materials can scarcely be told from silk they are enthusiastically indorsed by stylists for the making of the daytime pajama lounging ensemble.

When one takes note of the wearable and supremely attractive three-piece ensemble group in the picture, it is easy to understand why so many women are wearing pajama costumes in preference to the regulation "house dress."

The very new idea of using print for coats which is being so stressed in the matter of street and sports dress is also very happily developed in three-piece pajama outfits. The picture tells the story of a pajama ensemble which was shown in a recent fashion show held for the purpose of demonstrating the charm and possibilities offered by washable fabrics as brought out this season.

The sleeveless blouse is one of the chief attractions of this model. There is also a note of chic in the fact that the trousers are buttoned close about the ankles. The materials used include a solid buff cotton weave which has the appearance of washable broadcloth. The flowered fabric for the coat has a bit of silk intermingled

Rocks to Tell History

A history of the world told in rocks of each period, with words of pebbles and the pages of stone, is being prepared by Dr. A. R. Cook, who has just returned to England from a geological expedition to a number of districts in North America. He says that he will use the walls of a corridor in a museum for his history. Initial "pages" will show only stone formations. They will be followed by the first-known types of life embedded in stone, and then by fish, birds and reptiles, until human remains are reached.

She Wondered

Agnes had always been used to having rain water available at any time. Recently the family moved into a new home where there is no cistern and so it was necessary to obtain rain water by some other method.

One Saturday, when it rained hard all day, the child was asked by her mother to take a bucket and catch some rain water. This seeming rather strange to Agnes, she said: "Mother, don't you think I would look rather funny holding a bucket and an umbrella to catch a little rain water?"

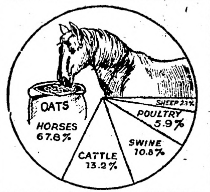
"Feeling His Oats"



(Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation)

Only a fourth of our oats crop goes into porridge and other table supplies, according to a survey by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The remainder stays on the farm where it is fed to as many Dobbins and Baldies as are left to enjoy it. With the coming of the truck and tractor, a smaller percentage of oats fed to farm animals goes to the stable and more finds its way into the pigsty. At present horses consume 67.8% of the oats fed to farm animals, cattle 13.2% and swine 10.8%. Oat chops have been found to be ideal for producing rapid growth in young pigs. Poultry consume 5.9% and sheep the remaining 2.3% of the total amount of oats fed to animals.

The first three on the list remain the same as last report the only change among the next two is Rodahl dropped down to 5th place and Davis jumped up from 6th to 4th place in this report. It is nearing the time when we can look for warmer weather which means that the place where you kept your cream in fine shape this winter will be no good to you during the spring, summer and early fall season. With the exception of a very few patrons the most of you have more trouble in keeping your cream sweet in the summer time then in the winter. We have patrons that have less trouble in the summer then in the winter. A few of our patrons have some mighty nice wells for to hang their cream in, and outside of lifting it up and down and keep on a lookout when the water raises rapidly, their trouble in keeping sweet cream isn't much worry to them.

Then we have a large number of patrons using cream coolers which is getting to be the real place to keep cream. I know that a cream cooler is a paying thing on the farm and I only want to incourage more of you to get one. If you think you can build one, all well and good, but in any event get it in order before the warm weather comes. These last few years considerable trouble have been experienced with water in stock tanks and this is what the patrons tell me. It is much water in the pasture that the cows will not drink out of the stock tank and the results are that being the cream cooler tank is in conction with the stock tank that their cream comes in sour.

They tell me if they were to pump water and let it run over the stock tank the yard would not be fit to use at all. In such a case I would say that it should not be much work nor very costly to arrange for some drainage from the stock tank and out far enuff away so as not to interfere with the yard. No cooling tank will cool cream without cold water running thru it but if it is used right I know that there is no danger of having sour cream insofar as temperature is concerned. There are many reasons why cream will turn sour even if you do keep it cold.

It does not matter how cold you keep your cream if you don't wash your separator twice a day. Be sure and take the cream from the separator and place the pail in another pail of cold water and stir the cream for just a few minutes which takes the animal heat out of it quickly. It is not much of a job when you have a system and things somewhat handy, and think of the satisfaction to both yourself and the buttermaker, say nothing about the extra money it means to you. I am sure you will agree with me when I say that it should be our aim to at least get all we have coming, and not feel indifferent and figure that a few cents a lb on butterfat or a cent or two on a dozen eggs don't mean much.

I feel that we have a system of handling eggs that is worth your patronage. If it is worth our while to sell our cream thru our own Land O' Lakes organization, then it there any good reason why we should not sell our eggs to them. The eggs are marketed thru the L. O' Lakes same as butter. Every week we get word as to what we shall pay per dozen as a cash price and after these eggs have been candled and graded you will receive a slip from the association headquarters at Thief River Falls, indicating the grading of the eggs.

All those grading a Land O' Lakes will receive a premium sometime during the following month. Right now there is no question but what you are getting at least 2 cents more per dozen for your eggs then you did selling them the old way. I am possitve that if it could be seen in dollars and cents what these co-operative marketing associations have meant to every one of you, I am sure that no efforts would have to be made to have you patronize them.

It is too bad a few have gone wrong but let me tell you that those that are on sound footing and are well organized, as well new ones that are starting up will be that much stronger. They have profitted by the experience of others.

I have always been a cooperater and I believe in it more and moreso It is right and feasable when left in hands of the right management.

Deliver your cream before 12 o'clock during the hot summer months.

LESSON XXI

PASTURE; There is no crop that brings greater returns for labor expended than good pasture for dairy cows. An acre of pasture may be made to yield as high as $100 a season in butterfat. Sweet Clover, the greatest producer of all pasture crops, will feed two cows per acre from May to October, or five months.

Sweet Clover is a one-year pasture crop and needs to be reseeded every other year. When Sweet Clover is used the pasture may be divided in two, and half used for grain (barley preferable) and seeded down with Sweet Clover In this way the pasture is rotated with grain every other year, or, that is, half the pasture, and can be made to grow twice the feed the whole pasture would ordinarily, and have the barley in addition.

A mixture of Medium Red and Alsike Clover and Timothy makes good pasture for a few years but quickly kills out after the second year if pastured closely.

A top dressing of manure helps pasture land greatly.

Law's Slow Process

A fortune of $150,000 which has been lying in chancery in England for almost a century, has just been divided between two brothers and a sister. It was in 1839 that this money passed into the care of chancery. Attempts had previously been made to recover it, but it is only now that a claim has been established.

Steadily Progressing

At a conference with W. C. T. U. and Anti-Soloon League members, one man told at this conferece that he was in New Orleans ten years ago, at the time of the city's famous festival of Mardi Gras, and on Canal street he counted seventy-five reeling drunks on that occasion. This time he had been in New Orleans a month, witnessed the annual Mardi Gras parade, and in that entire month's time had seen just four drunks. Slowly, but surely the lines are tightening.

Other cities tell the same encouraging tale. There in no doubt that prohibition sentiment is growing.

Which Will You Save?

YOU can save pennies or save chicks. Poultry yard facts show that ordinary untested rations and mixtures such as hard boiled eggs and oatmeal save pennies but not chicks. Usually 50% of them die. Poultrymen who are making money invest one penny more per chick and save 90 to 100% of their chicks. They feed Purina Chick Startena, the buttermilk starting ration containing Cod Liver Oil. We'll be glad to tell you of a feeding plan that's as simple as A B C. It saves chicks and brings them through to early maturity.

And now, as at this instant they heard the car start away again, the accusation in her inquisitor's gaze deepened; for Mr. Creighton was sure that it was seeing his father's car at the door that had made Marvin drive on. The girl was a liar and a schemer. In the very act of waiting here for his son, she had denied that she ever remained here for visitors! If she had not a guilty conscience, if in her relations with Marvin there were nothing to hide, she would not, of course, find it necessary to lie. A dangerous wench! Marvin could thank his father for saving him from her. Mr. Creighton felt ruthless.

With his usual directness he came to his point. "You were expecting my son? That was, of course, his car that stopped here and then, at sight of mine, drove on—wasn't it?"

"Not being an adept at seeing through a brick wall, Mr. Creighton, I don't know."

Her evading a direct answer to his every question only confirmed him in his darkest apprehensions.

"Miss Schwenckton," he said abruptly, "I would make it worth your while to resign from this school and go away."

"Away from your son, Mr. Creighton?" she inquired pleasantly.

"Exactly."

"But in these days of airships whither can I flee that he cannot follow? If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, or ascend up into heaven, or make my bed in hell—"

"What is it worth to you to get out of this neighborhood and stay out?"

"Well, not being very experienced in these transactions—"

"'Not very experienced'!"

"Not very," she imperturbably repeated, "so I'll have to ask your advice. What's the most I ought to ask? I want to do as well as I can for myself, of course."

"Come, Miss Schwenckton, I'm serious—please don't try to play the fool with me! You must know that I could get rid of you less expensively. A few words from me to your trustees, and you would lose your position. But I've no desire to injure you. I prefer to help you—"

"Help me out of the neighborhood?"

"I'll amply compensate you for the loss of your school and something substantial over."

"You really and truly are offering me money to give up this darned school and go away?"

"I am."

"But," she exclaimed, a glad surprise coming into her eyes, "this is the first time in all my life that I've had money thrust at me! Will you give me any amount I ask?"

"Of course not—you'll have to be reasonable," he protested, feeling shocked that a girl who looked like this should after all be sordid and unprincipled.

"Just what would you call reasonable, Mr. Creighton?"

"Name what it's worth to you to leave and then I'll answer you."

"Well, then, let me see—well, I'll take my railroad fare to Hollywood and enough more to support me (and my family) for six months while I'm convincing the picture makers at Hollywood what a gold mine I'd be for them."

"Your family? You're not going to tell me you have some children to support?"

"No, I won't go so far as that. Only some parents. Two helpless little parents."

"If I give you a check for five thousand dollars, when will you leave?"

Meely caught her breath. The sum seemed vast to her. A thousand pounds! It would liberate her from this schoolroom prison, relieve her mother's needs and waft her to faraway California with a sense of ease and security such as she had not known in many years!

"If you will sign this statement, giving up all claims upon my son—"

He took a folded paper from his breast pocket and laid it on the desk in front of her, pushing aside the letter she had started to write to her mother.

"All right," she answered him gayly, though not at once signing the paper. "And if I fail at Hollywood, I'll marry one of your sons and then my husband can pay back to you this loan—"

"One of my sons! I've only one son who'd be fool enough to give you the chance, young woman!"

"But Mr. Creighton," she asked in genuine curiosity, "how did you find out about us? Did St. Croix talk in his sleep?"

Mr. Creighton stared at her. Now why, he wondered, was she putting up a bluff like that?—pretending it was St. Croix!

"St. Croix!" he repeated, with a laugh. "Don't waste your talents, Miss Schwenckton, trying to deceive me! My son, St. Croix, will never cause me a moment's anxiety as to his choice of a wife!"

"A wife!" she breathed. "My—goodness! What's all this about, anyway?"

"I'm sure you know quite well what it's all about."

"If it's not about St. Croix, I don't!"

She looked so sincerely puzzled and astonished that for an instant he believed her—almost.

But only for an instant. "I'll never have to pay any girl five thousand dollars to keep St. Croix from marrying her!" he repeated.

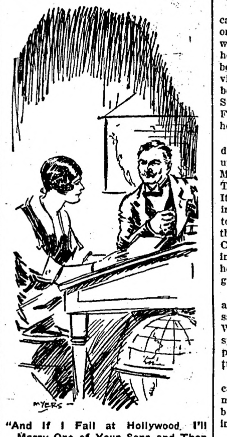
"But—but," she faltered, "if it's Marvin you've been talking about—do you mean Marvin? But you can't possibly—but what on earth makes you think Marvin wants to—" She pulled herself up with a jerk; if she were not careful he would realize that there was no least need for his paying her that bribe! "Oh, if it's Marvin you mean," she rattled on, "then I'll reconsider! I don't think I can sign away Marvin! Or, if I do, that'll really cost you something! Marvin is really worth something!"

"You're mistaken. He's worth the puny salary he makes—fifty-six hundred dollars a year. Not a dollar more."

"I know—I didn't mean that kind of worth. I meant human worth. I wouldn't, however, get money from you, Mr. Creighton, on false pretenses. I really have my doubts whether Marvin would want a wife who could not tell how many states there are in his country. Do you think he would?"

"I'll tell you what sort of a wife Marvin wouldn't want when you've signed that paper."

Without a moment's hesitation she took up her pen and affixed her name, "Amelia Schwenckton," to the statement that she gave up all claims of every description upon the son of Mr. Creighton.



"And If I Fail at Hollywood, I'll Marry One of Your Sons and Then My Husband Can Pay Back to You This Loan."

"How unbusiness-like you are!" he said as he received the paper from her hands and tucked it into his breast pocket, "to sign this and give it over to me before I have given you my check.

He took from another pocket a bank book and rapidly filled out and tore off a check.

"Now, then," he said, not at once handing it to her, "when will you go?"

"I think I ought to give the trustees a chance to get a teacher in my place, don't you? Think of all those children running 'round loose for days without getting educated! My conscience won't stand for it!"

"A conscience that can stand for bribes—"

"But your conscience seems to stand for them! If you think bribes so base, why do you go 'round offering bribes to your sons' prospective wives? Corrupting the Poor Working Girl! By the way, Mr. Creighton, this won't be a bribe, it will be a loan. I'll pay you back—if I have to marry one of your sons in order to. For I prophesy, Mr. Creighton, that when you know me better, you're going to want me for a daughter-in-law! Oh, yes, you are! When I come back from Hollywood I'll prove it to you—for I'll stop and pay you a visit. Or, I'll stop off and be your cook until I've earned that five thousand dollars. In America a cook must earn five thousand dollars in the bat of an eye—"

"When will you leave?" he sharply repeated.

"The very moment I've the wherewithal to leave!"

"But," he informed her in a firm tone as he handed her the check, "if you dare to come around here again, you will be dealt with, Miss Schwenckton, in a more summary manner than you will like!"

"I'm afraid, Mr. Creighton, I'll have trouble cashing this—and it would put you in such a funny light, giving five thousand dollars to such a dangerously alluring girl as I am apparently! If you've the real money about you—"

He had been wondering whether she would prove so sophisticated as to realize that. He had no intention, really, of letting her leave the room with that check.

"You are indeed 'experienced,' Miss Schwenckton, for one so young!" he said ironically as he took back the check and gave her a roll of bills—ten five-hundred-dollar notes.

And it was at the very moment of her receiving these that again the sound of a car stopping outside interrupted them.

"He's come back again," said Mr. Creighton bitterly, "in the hope that by this time I'd be gone! You have played your game well!"

"And this time," she answered blithely, her head bent to listen, "though your car is still there, he doesn't seem to be driving away again."

Little did they dream that the first car that had stopped and then driven on had carried away Mrs. Creighton, who, the moment she had recognized her husband's car parked nearby, had been startlingly convinced that Marvin's fantastic suspicions of a plot between his father and Lady Sylvia St. Croix was not after all fantastic! For what else in the world could bring her husband to the schoolhouse?

She had decided, after a moment's debating with herself, not to intrude upon their conference. She would let Marvin know, when she saw him on Thursday, what she had discovered. It was so evident that he was deeply interested in the girl—was his interest too deep to be turned to aversion by the fact that she was Lady Sylvia St. Croix and in league with his father to intrigue him into marrying her?—as he had declared such a fact would disgust him!

A half hour after she had driven away, Marvin, driving out toward Absalom Puntz', felt, as he drew near William Penn schoolhouse, that that spot was fast becoming to him the pivot on which his whole universe turned!

As he came nearer, the sight of a car standing before the little building made his heart sink like lead in his breast. Was Miss Schwenckton having a rendezvous again with St. Croix?

As soon, however, as he was near enough to recognize the car, he saw, to his startled surprise, that it was not St. Croix', but his father's! Instantly he was convinced, just as his mother had been, that his suspicion of a collusion between "Miss Schwenckton" and his father, to entrap him into a marriage, had been well founded.

He did not, with his mother's delicacy, decide not to intrude upon them. On the contrary, he lost not a moment in parking, alighting, and striding straight into the schoolhouse to confront them—his heart and brain in a whirl.

At the sound of his approaching step they had stepped down from the platform, Mr. Creighton's face stern as the Judgment day, Miss Schwenckton's as interested as if she were in a theater seeing a play, as they stood looking expectantly toward the door.

Marvin's long stride halted at sight of them.

"Well?" his father peremptorily inquired. "What are you doing here?"

"My duty as the county superintendent. Earning my salary."

"An easy, pleasant way to earn it—calling after work on your young teachers!"

"I'm here much oftener during school hours," answered Marvin, wondering whether this tone of displeasure were assumed and why.

"You wished to see me about something, Mr. Creighton?" Miss Schwenckton addressed Marvin composedly—the elder Creighton recalling that she had spoken of him as "Marvin."

"Only to investigate," replied Marvin, "why, at this hour, your school is still open."

Belief in Witchcraft Strong in Year 1680

A writer, looking over the annals of Newburyport, Mass., dug up a curious case of the witchcraft craze. It was in 1680 that some very strange happenings took place in the house of an old resident; pots and pans rattled at unearthly hours of the night and missiles flew through the air in the most mysterious manner and on one occasion a brick from the chimney struck the old man and nearly ended his earthly existence. His wife was tried and convicted of being a witch and sentenced to be hanged. A neighbor suspected a boy, the old man's grandson, and in telling the aged man he could determine the cause, hinted he had a knowledge of astrology and astronomy. Suspicion of witchcraft fell on him and he was tried and escaped conviction only when another neighbor testified he had seen the boy throw a shoe at his grandfather.

Then suspicion fell on the grandmother and she was convicted and sentenced to death. Meanwhile the grandson went away and the disturbances ceased. A reprieve was granted and later the case was dismissed.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. Shingled walls make a home attractive in exterior appearance and something out of the ordinary, as will be seen by the home design shown in the accompanying illustrations. This is a six-room house, 22 feet wide and 29 feet deep.

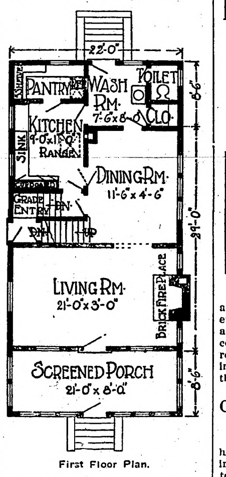
One of the attractive features of this farm home is the porch, 21 feet wide and 8 feet deep. While it is an open porch, it is so designed that it can be screened in for summer, or glassed in for winter.

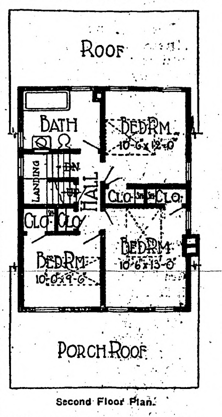


First Floor Plan.

The floor plan which accompanies the exterior view shows the arrangement of the six rooms and their sizes. The living room extends across the front of the house and is 21 feet long by 13 feet wide. Adjoining the kitchen is a large washroom. Three bedrooms and bath are shown on the second floor.

The house is of frame construction set on a concrete foundation with a basement the same size as the house dimensions. Here is ample room for the basement heating plant and storage of fuel and of vegetables, etc.

This type of home is not usually found on farms, but is very popular among suburban home owners. However, for the farm family that wants a medium-sized home, at a reasonable cost, this design is recommended. Its rooms are large and comfortable and include all of the modern conveniences that are required by farm families.



Second Floor Plan.

Cardboard House Models Simplify Visualization

Cardboard models of projected homes enable the home-owner seeking to visualize an architectural work to predetermine its lines and proportions before it is built, frequently saving expense incurred because of changes decided upon at a late date in the building operation.

The models are constructed by firms specializing in the work, which use the working drawings as the means of constructing the model.

New Experience

It is said that Charlie Chaplin began his career as a circus performer. Before "going on" each night, it is declared, Charlie would put a sack of peanuts in his hip pocket for an elephant friend. The pachyderm would shuffle up behind Charlie, thrust his trunk into the hip pocket and snuffle gratefully.

On one occasion Charlie thought he would give the elephant a real treat. So he placed some nice, fresh, sticky popcorn in his pocket. The elephant could not get the candy out. Nor could he extricate his trunk.

At this point in the story Charlie always pauses for effect.

"You've heard an elephant trumpet," he will say, "but did you ever hear one trumpet in your hip pocket?"—Kansas City Star.

The tension adjusts itself, and the balloon-type rolls remove the soap and water evenly from every part of the fabric.

PHONE for a Maytag. See it wash a big tubful of clothes every 2 to 7 minutes, an average washing in an hour without hand-rubbing anything. Use it for a week's washing FREE. If it doesn't sell itself, don't keep it.

House Burned

At about eleven o'clock last Thursday forenoon the home of Leonard Swan and family was destroyed by fire. All the house hold goods and belongings of the family were lost. The fire had started in the kitchen and had gained such a headway before it was noticed that the family had to rush out to save themselves.

The Swan family had been under quaratine for Scarlet fever the past month, and Mrs. Swan who was still in bed from the effects of the fever, had to be carried out. They were released from quarantine Friday, and are now living with Mrs. J. Swan.

It was a total loss to them as they carried no insurance. The house was owned by a bank in Thief River Falls.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank the Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid for the beautiful flowers they gave us, the Ladies Club for their remembrance, those that hauled the bus and especially all those that gave to the sum of money which was given us.

We appreciated the favors done for us, and again thank you one and all for your kindess.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Swan

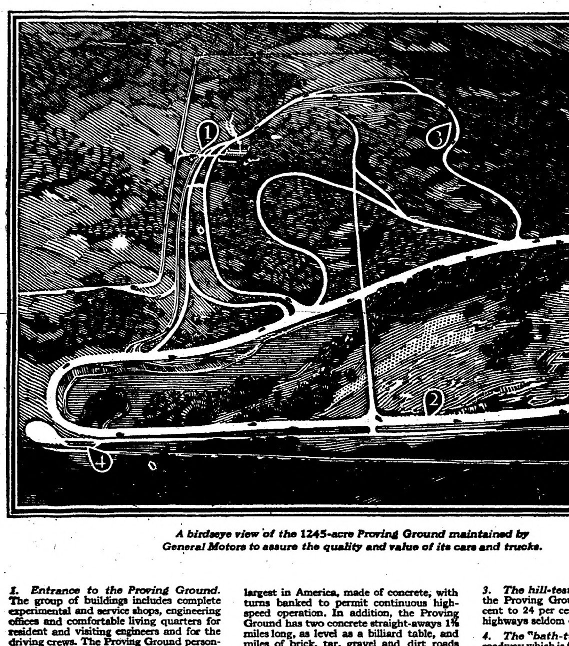
Put "Gas" in Chemistry

Jan Baptista Van Helmot, noted Flemish physician and chemist, a native of Brussels, who lived from 1577 to 1644, is said to have introduced the word "gas" in the terminology of the science of chemistry.

This is General Motors Proving Ground



A birdseye view of the 1245-acre Proving Ground maintained by General Motors to assure the quality and value of its cars and trucks.

1. Entrance to the Proving Ground. The group of buildings includes complete experimental and service shops, engineering offices and comfortable living quarters for resident and visiting engineers and for the driving crews. The Proving Ground personnel numbers more than 200 men.

2. The 4-mile high-speed loop. The largest in America, made of concrete, with turns banked to permit continuous high-speed operation. In addition, the Proving Ground has two concrete straight-aways 1⅝ miles long, as level as a billiard table, and miles of brick, tar, gravel and dirt roads which reproduce every driving and weather condition.

3. The hill-test road. Test hill grades at the Proving Ground range from 7.26 per cent to 24 per cent. The grades on public highways seldom exceed 7 per cent.

4. The "bath-tub." A depressed concrete roadway which is filled with water at varying depths to reproduce flooded roadway conditions.

Here each General Motors car must prove its value

ON a 1245-acre tract near Milford, Michigan, convenient to all its car and truck divisions, General Motors has the first and largest proving ground for automobiles.

Here tests are made and facts determined to a degree impossible when cars and trucks are tested on the public highways. Here each new model of General Motors must prove itself, point by point, before it is produced for sale to the public.

More than 135 different tests are applied to each car tested at the Proving Ground. They involve every phase of construction and performance: power, speed, endurance, acceleration, braking, steering, handling, riding comfort, fuel economy and so on. In three months a car or truck covers more miles than you would drive it in three years.

The Proving Ground is another example of how General Motors is serving the public. It is also your assurance that when you buy a General Motors product you are getting all possible quality and value at its price and the advantages of a policy of continuous improvement.

Look at these values—then clip the coupon

The current models of General Motors cars are briefly described below. Never before in the history of the automobile industry have such performance, such quality, such comfort and such beauty been offered in their respective price classes. They have been proved at the Proving Ground!

See which car or cars interest you most, then check and mail the coupon below. You will receive complete, illustrated information, together with two interesting little books telling all about General Motors Proving Ground and just what General Motors policies are.

IN BAD HEALTH FOR SIX YEARS

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Gave Her Strength

Arapahoe, Okla.—"I want to tell you just what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was in bad health for about six years. My nerves were all to pieces. I could not sleep and wasn't able to do my housework. Now I feel so much better! I sleep like a baby. I can do all my housework, washing and ironing and feel fine all the time. I help my husband some in the field, too, so you see we have something to praise the Vegetable Compound for. I will gladly answer all letters asking about the Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines."—MRS. Trapping Tomato Moth

The use of electricity in exterminating tomato worms is being demonstrated on the farm of L. W. Purdum & Sons, Danville, Va. Having tried all recommended measures for the control of the tomato worm without success, Mr. Purdum conceived the idea of trapping the tomato moth before it could lay eggs. A simple trap with a 40-watt lamp was constructed. A three-quart pan containing kerosene is suspended from the reflector about 6 inches below the lamp. The lights attract the insects and in flying against the globe they drop into the kerosene underneath.

Don't Neglect Your Kidneys!

You Can't Be Well When Kidneys Act Sluggishly.

DO you find yourself running down—always tired, nervous and depressed? Are you stiff and achy, subject to nagging backache, drowsy headaches and dizzy spells? Are kidney excretions scanty, too frequent or burning in passage? Too often this indicates sluggish kidneys and shouldn't be neglected.

Doan's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, increase the secretion of the kidneys and thus aid in the elimination of waste impurities. Doan's are endorsed everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

50,000 Users Endorse Doan's:

Mrs. E. M. Franklin, 1320 Front St., Fargo, N. D., says: "I had a lot of trouble from my kidneys not acting regularly. My back ached. I had headaches and tired very easily. Having often heard Doan's Pills recommended I used them. They fixed up my kidneys and rid me of the backache and other troubles. I can highly recommend Doan's to anyone suffering as I did."

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

SUPERWHEAT GROWN NOW WITHOUT SOIL

Produced in Water by Means of Artificial Light.

San Francisco.—Growth of a superwheat that reached maturity in 13 weeks with neither soil nor sunlight was announced here by the University of California. Wheat, under field conditions, often requires five months to mature.

The announcement follows completion of lengthy research in a laboratory on the university campus by Prof. A. R. Davis of the division of agriculture chemistry and Prof. D. R. Roagland of the division of plant nutrition.

The experiment is recognized by these scientists as of the widest possible import.

The wheat was grown, it was revealed, in a greenhouse laboratory, where artificial light was furnished by means of 12 argon-filled lamps of 300 candlepower each and where jars of water containing the chemical elements necessary for plant growth replaced the soil which ordinarily contains them.

The quality of the wheat at maturity, the professors declare, was much higher than that raised under field conditions and could be classified as being of a "supernature."

The fact that the wheat was grown to maturity in 13 weeks, a previously unheard-of achievement, demonstrates, according to the investigators, that the length of the light period is important to growing plants.

The lights applied to the wheat plants were turned on for 16 hours a day, and this kept them growing rapidly. With the doubling of the light exposure the plant development was multiplied by four, the professors revealed, and when the light was applied for a full 24-hour day the growth was "astounding."

Previous experimenters in these pioneer field were troubled by the infrared, or heat, rays from the lamps and used a water screen to solve the problem. But this was an unsuccessful solution, and Professor Davis found the correct one. He circulated air through the glass chamber by means of an electric fan.

It was established that the sun rays which contribute to plant growth were present in the electric light rays, even to the longer ultra-violet rays.

Lightning Rods Aid in Protecting Neighbors

Pittsfield, Mass.—Tall buildings and lightning rods mounted on high towers protect neighboring structures from lightning, provided they are not so high as to extend out of the cone of protection. This protected area extends around the base of the high building for a distance of between two and four times its height. Imaginary lines drawn from the top of the building to the edge of the protected area define the protected cone, says F. W. Peek, Jr., in charge of the General Electric company's high voltage investigations at its laboratory here.

Mr. Peek's investigations have been made with artificial lightning at pressures of as high as 3,500,000 volts. These man-made flashes have been used on small models of buildings. However, confirmation of his discoveries was obtained by studying a natural electrical storm that occurred in New York last summer, and during which the New York World building was struck. Though this building is close to the Woolworth tower, and is in the 1,100-foot circle around its base that is protected, the dome of the World building extends for about 100 feet outside the cone, and that is the reason that it was struck, explains Mr. Peek. If it had been 200 feet closer to the Woolworth building, it would have been protected.

Practical application of these experiments, says Mr. Peek, has already been made in California, in safeguarding oil storage tanks from lightning. Several tall rods, place outside the big reservoirs, provide overlapping cones of protection and reduce the danger to a minimum.

New Rustless Wheat on Market in 1929

St. Paul, Minn.—With only 125 bushels of the seed available, the Minnesota agricultural experiment station will not market its new rust-resistant wheat until 1929.

Andrew Boss, director of the station, says the present supply will be planted in 1928 under conditions that will insure still greater development and that seed likely will be made available to Minnesota farmers in 1929.

The new wheat is a cross between Marquis, the standard bread wheat of the Northwest, and the durum Iumillo. It is highly resistant to rust and at the same time of good milling quality. When offered for seed it likely will cost 26 per cent more than ordinary wheat.

USE OLD AUTO TIRES TO MAKE NEW SHOES

Saloniki Peasants Use 50,000 Casings a Year.

Washington. — Discarded American automobile tires that once were dispatched to rubber salvaging plants now are being made into shoes for peasants of Saloniki, Greece. It is reported that 50,000 casings are imported annually to meet the demand. Each tire makes three shoes.

"Saloniki is famous as a city of refuge," says a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic society. "That fact accounts for its enormous peasant population to whom the new footgear is a luxury.

"When the Spaniards persecuted the Jews in the Fifteenth century, some of them fled as far east as Saloniki and their descendants now help make up the city's large Jewish population, which numbers nearly that of the Greeks. And in recent years a human deluge of Greeks who were driven out of Turkey swelled the census figures from about 150,000 to more than 200,000.

"The original 'Salonikans' are lost in the shuffle of nationalities represented among the inhabitants," continues the bulletin. "On any busy corner one will see nearly as many different races as sit in a session of the League of Nations. There are Greeks from all parts of the peninsula, Albanians, Italians, Russians, Germans and natives of every Balkan state. Some of their families are among the oldest inhabitants, human remnants of the early occupation of the city when it was a football in the hands of empires, including the Macedonians, Saracens, Normans, Romans, Venetians, Bulgarians and Turks.

Rival of Constantinople.

"Even with such a mixture, Saloniki has maintained its prestige as one of the most important ports of southeast Europe. When the Balkan states are at peace and the port is used as an outlet to the sea, it rivals Constantinople.

"The fine buildings which form a solid wall on the land side of the quay, pierced only by streets leading up into the city, give Saloniki a modern appearance. Here and in the commercial district there are shops, coffee houses and a few fine old residences. The westerner at once notices a lack of parks and other open spaces, but a peep through an open door to a courtyard in a narrow side street reveals that most of Saloniki's beauty is hidden behind high walls.

"On the hills beyond new cottages of former refugees indicate that Saloniki has assimilated many of her newcomers from other lands, but thousands of them still live in the squalor of the Saloniki slums.

"In the dirty streets barefoot women plod the rough cobble with loads of wood tied to their backs that one might hesitate packing on a donkey. Smiling, ragged water boys and girls in tatters carry their heavy jugs. Milkmen, too poor to own carts, are weighted down by two five-gallon cans resting upon their backs until their bodies are at right angles with their legs.

Use American Street Cars.

"But with all its squalor and poverty Saloniki can boast of a glorious past. Several cities have been built on the site since it was founded more than 2,000 years ago. The present one is named for Thessalonike, a half sister of Alexander the Great. Cicero lived there for a time; Nero and Trajan decorated the city; it was once the temporary home of three emperors and it became famous in the Christian world as the place to which St. Paul addressed two of his letters.

"Successive fires and pilferings have destroyed historic landmarks. One of its oldest existing antiquities is Varder street, which cuts across the city. It was a part of the old Roman highway from the Adriatic to the Bosporus, which earlier still was the Royal way of the Macedonia kings. Where the Roman legions, the phalanxes of Alexander and the immortals of Xerxes trod its surface, an American street car rumbles, driven by a modern Greek or Spaniard. In its course it runs under an old Roman arch.

"Some of the Saloniki churches survived the fury of the Middle ages and are the finest remains of the past.

"The Greeks have suffered by remaining in Saloniki under foreign regime, but one source of inspiration to them has been the sight of Mount Olympus towering among the hills to the southwest."

Find Way to Unroll Brittle Manuscript

London.—The aid of ultra-modern chemistry has been invoked to salvage another relic of the remote past.

An ancient leather roll of Egyptian writing had lain unopened for 50 years in the British museum because it was so brittle that no one dared unroll it. Experiments with a broken fragment of the leather in the museum's laboratory, however, finally gave scientists a clew as to how to handle the mysterious manuscript.

Several thin coatings of celluloid were soaked into the pores of the leather, after which it was cemented with strong celluloid on to a piece of celluloid-treated cheesecloth. In this way it was unrolled without a break and pressed flat between two glass plates to dry. It remained perfectly flat after drying and can now be read with ease.

TRIBE'S REFUSE ONLY MONUMENT

Washington.—When the Calusa Indians, who dominated southern Florida when the Spaniards landed, and who were reported to have grown rich on the shipwrecked gold of the Conquistadores, became extinct, they left behind them as almost their sole monument the refuse of the food they ate. Their principal diet was shellfish and the shells they threw out piled up into heaps thirty feet high and hundreds of feet long.

The Smithsonian Institution's recent expedition under Henry B. Collins, Jr., determined the point about which there had been some uncertainty, that these shell heaps were really kitchen middens and not artificial structures with some other significance. The proof is that all the shell heaps investigated were stratified with ashes, small animal bones and other refuse from the kitchen.

The language of the Calusa, except for a few isolated words and place names, is lost, little or nothing is known of their beliefs, customs or material culture. Some mounds of soft beach material and loose sand do exist, some of which were foundations for houses, and others burial mounds. Mr. Collins excavated several of these. His most important find was of twenty-five well preserved skeletons in a single mound.

Most of the bodies had been folded with the knees to the chin and burial was very close together. The skeletons were excellently preserved. The burials probably took place before the coming of the white man, since only one bone was found with any evidence of disease and the artifacts associated with the burials were purely of native origin. The only objects in the way of mortuary offerings were pieces of broken pottery placed around the heads, an arrangement not known among other Indians. The mound contained no other artifacts.

Motor Police Seen as Most Efficient

Swampscott, Mass.—The way to efficiency in the small town police department lies through a completely motorized force, says Walter Francis Reeves, chief of the Swampscott police.

Chief Reeves is trying to put his idea into practice here and points out that the town's force has shrunk from twenty-one patrolmen and officers to fifteen men. With the decrease and diminished expenses have come motor equipment, and, the chief asserts, a far more efficient police service.

Reeves believes that every town in the United States should motorize its force. His plan would banish the old-time "sidewalk pounder" and would put all policemen except traffic men in well equipped vehicles, automobiles or motorcycles with sidecars.

A criminal, he said, can keep tab on the old-time patrolman, but he cannot tell when the motor-mounted policeman may show up at any given spot. In suburban and thickly settled town districts alike, he says, police are needed who can be summoned at top speed.

Asiatic Monkey Aids Yellow Fever Research

New York.—Man's study of yellow fever, the mysterious tropical disease that once took heavy toll in the western hemisphere, has been expedited by the achievements of a little band of scientists now at work in West Africa.

The yellow fever commission of the International health board, Rockefeller foundation, has found an Asiatic monkey, similar to the familiar companion of the organ grinder, that is susceptible to the disease. Working with this primate, the commission has already made several important contributions to knowledge of the fever.

The experts have been able to transmit the virus consistently to the monkey, known as Macacus Rhesus, both by inoculation and by the primary infective agent, the mosquito. It has been found that the serum from recovered cases of yellow fever will protect monkeys against virulent blood, an important discovery because it indicates the possibility of treating human patients in like manner.

Warns Against Buying Seed Corn Carelessly

Washington.—Unless the buyer knows that the seller is reliable and can supply the kind of seed he offers, extreme care should be exercised in purchasing seed corn, the Department of Agriculture warns.

"Unfortunately," it says, "there are likely to be many individuals who will offer to sell crossed seed at a high price when the seed is little more productive, if any, than ordinary seed corn."

The supply of superior crossed seed, the department advises, is comparatively small.

Concave Mirror Used in Latest Telescope

The largest telescope in Italy, with a mirror 40 inches in diameter, is now in use at the Merate observatory, in the foothills of the Alps about 20 miles northeast of Milan. Ordered in 1923, when the dust and smoke of Milan made it necessary for the observatory there to move to a better location, the new instrument embodies all the latest improvements. It is a reflecting telescope, in which the 40-inch concave mirror takes the place of the convex lens in the more familiar type of telescope. The moving parts of the telescope weigh more than 18 tons, yet so perfectly are they balanced that a one-half horse power motor is adequate for turning the instrument to follow the stars across the sky. The instrument was built by the Carl Zeiss Optical works, in Jena, Germany.

Fog Extends Far

A fog in the Atlantic ocean is generally about 30 miles in diameter.

Rate Of Seeding Oats

THE amount of seed to sow depends to some extent on the condition and fertility of the soil, the method of seeding, and the size of seed. More seed is needed on weedy, poorly prepared land than on a well-prepared seed-bed, but excess seed can not be considered a substitute for good seed-bed preparation. The usual rate of drilling is from 8 to 12 pecks per acre. For sowing broadcast the rates vary from 10 to 16 pecks. Large seeded varieties should be sown at a heavier rate than small-seeded ones.

Date Of Seeding Oats

FOR success in growing oats the seed should be sown early. In the Corn Belt, the best date of seeding ordinarily is the earliest that the land can be worked as permitted by soil moisture and weather conditions. Late seeding usually results in a decided reduction in yield and quality.

IF your newly-arrived chicks could talk they would say: "Do not feed us until we are 72 hours old. We are supplied with food during this period by the remaining part of the egg yolks which we absorbed into our bodies just before we were hatched. When we are 72 hours old give us a feed which will provide life and growth vitamins." There are 1592 hatcheries which say, "Feed Purina." They know what it takes to keep chicks alive and growing. Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXII

Supplement the Pasture: When the pasture runs low, have something else to feed. It will save production and the pasture at the same time. When cows eat to the ground they are killing the grass, especially in the Fall.

A feed that can be cut green and fed in the barn is great help when the pasture is low. Oats is perhaps best for an early crop and corn later. They should be grown as near the barn as convenient to save time, as they need to be cut every day or every other day for best results. Sweet Clover and Alfalfa can also be used for this purpose. Sweet Clover makes one of the earliest crops that can be grown.

A man can go to the field with a wagon and scythe and cut enough green feed in half and hour, where there is a good stand, for 10 cows. A little green feed, fed in the barn when the pasture is low, helps wonderfully.

Kicked By Horse

Kenneth Swan had a narrow escape from serious injury one day last week when one of their big farm horses kicked him in the head, inflicting a bad gash above the right eye. Kenneth is at the present nursing a couple black eyes but, he will soon be okay again.

Many Haystacks Burned

It has been reported to this office that several farmers have lost their hay stacks the past week thru grass fires that have been set, and then left to run to suit itself. This is indeed a poor way of doing things, and we too feel that the guilty parties should be compelled to pay for the damages caused by these fiires.

H. A. Pflughoeft, the district Club Leader, of Crookston, will be here and also Mr. Collet from Warren, who will try and help the local club more this year than heretofore.

There is no reason why a 4-H club can not function here as well as in the other communities. The local club maybe has not received the right kind of support which is the reason for it having to be reorganized at this time. Right now is the time for anyone having a boy or girl old enough to join the local club, assist them in getting enrolled, and than give them a little help with the work.

Preacher Surely Had Right to Be Annoyed

E. S. Harkness, the philanthropist and patron of the arts who recently gave $250,000 to the New York Memorial hospital for the purchase of four grams of radium, was talking at the University club against speculation.

Speculation is demoralizing," he said. "There was once a country preacher who speculated in oil stock. A deacon asked him some time afterward:

"'Well, doctor, what have you done with that oil stock of yours?'

"'Done? I've been done. Got cheated out of it,' the preacher said.

"'No!' said the deacon. 'No! How come?'

"'Why,' said the preacher, 'I thought the stuff was valueless, you see, and so I unloaded it on a greenhorn for a song. But it turned out to be worth thousands, and that swindler who bought it from me knew it all the time."—Kansas City Star.

"You needn't try to bluff me, Marvin!" his father frowned. "I know all about it! You've come here to keep an appointment with this young woman!"

"I was not aware of it!"

"I tell you," his father indignantly insisted, "you needn't try to humbug me! I caught her in the very act of waiting for you!"

Marvin looked perplexed. "Well, if you did, why on earth should you (apparently) be blaming me for that?"

"When I show you what I have here—" But as his father snatched from his breast pocket a folded paper, Meely broke in:

"Now that you are here, Mr. Marvin, will you be so kind as to drive me to the nearest telegraph office? I've got to wire some money to my needy parents and it's pressing."

"I'm at your service," Marvin, looking more and more bewildered, responded, taking her coat from a hook on the wall as she started to reach for it, and holding it while she slipped into it.

"B-but," his father stammered, flushing very red, "Miss Schwenckton! Your promise! This paper you've signed—"

"Yes?" she inquired. "What about it?"

"What about it! Your signed promise to make no demands on my son—"

"But I wouldn't suppose my asking him to take me to the express office to cable—telegraph to my family a bit of money I've acquired—would come under the 'demands' referred to in that paper, would it?"

"In the very hour of your signing this paper and accepting that money you dare to go off driving with my son!"

"What on earth?" asked Marvin, their demeanor and conversation not only not bearing out his supposition, but suggesting a very different state of things.

"Look at this!" his father exclaimed, thrusting the paper at him. "Read that! And then decide whether you want to go off driving with that girl!"

Marvin, feeling dizzy, read the few sentences on the paper signed "Amelia Schwenckton."

"But what, in God's name, is it all about? What sort of 'demands' is she swearing not to make on me—" He stopped short, a staggering idea flashing upon him. "You must mean St. Croix!" He turned to the girl. "Does this refer to St. Croix?"

"I don't know!"

"You don't know!" cried Mr. Creighton. "Why," he exclaimed, "are you both trying to saddle St. Croix with a thing he has nothing to do with? As if I'd ever have to buy off a girl from marrying him!"

"Are you buying off Miss Schwenckton from marrying me?" laughed Marvin, and as he spoke he tore the paper into bits and scattered them on the floor.

"What makes you think, Father, that such desperate measures as this are necessary for my protection against even so dangerous a person as Miss Schwenckton?"

"And anyway," the girl spoke in, "I'm resigning. Please find a teacher, Mr. Marvin, for my school, will you?—for I'm leaving tonight."

"Father! Why on earth are you driving her away? There's absolutely nothing between us and—"

"'Dangerous person' is right, Marvin, and no exaggeration! I have just given that girl five thousand dollars for the signed promise which you so imprudently destroyed!"

"I don't believe it!" cried Marvin sharply.

"Miss Schwenckton, will you show him the roll of bills I've just given you?"

"He might tear them up as he did your piece of paper!" she demurred, showing no least embarrassment or shame. "It's not a bribe, Mr. Marvin," she explained, "it's a loan, which I shall pay back as soon as I've earned it at Hollywood. Your father seemed so anxious to believe that I was luring you to your ruin and so eager to buy me off you that I hadn't the heart to disappoint him; especially as I'm in desperate need of money. And it is nice of your father to give the American screen a chance to be elevated! So I'm off to Hollywood!" And before either Marvin or his father could reply, she had seized her hat and fled from the room.

Marvin made a dash to follow, but his father interposed—slamming the door and standing against it.

"Don't make a d—d fool of yourself, Marvin! Running after a girl who takes a bribe!"

"No worse than your giving her a bribe!" Marvin panted.

"You can thank me for saving you from being taken in by an unprincipled hussy!"

"Stop calling her names! You're entirely wrong about her!"

"What would you call a girl who accepts five thousand dollars to drop you cold?"

"You heard her say she was borrowing it to go to Hollywood. She's perfectly right, too. She needs it and you don't. You've too much money and she hasn't enough. You held it out to her and she grabbed it. I don't blame her! What started you on such a wild chase as this? What on earth put it into your head that I was courting her? Surely she didn't claim I was?"

"Her accepting the bribe was an admission of it! If you'd marry a girl that would take a bribe—"

"You thrust it on her—she needed it desperately—"

"Do you deny being in love with her?"

"I wasn't sure until just now! But a girl with pluck enough to cheek you, Father, and grab while the grabbing was good—oh, well," Marvin drew a long breath and turned away, his face suddenly gloomy and sullen, "you needn't worry! I wouldn't marry an actress, they're too temporary; I'd prefer a permanent arrangement in marriage. Let me out, please."

"Marvin!" His father's tone was suddenly gentle. "Give up this fool job of yours and come home! Your mother is unhappy, having you away. And—of course I want you back, too."

Marvin hesitated. "I can't turn down this job until my term of office is over. And if my living at home means I've got to sell my manhood to you, Father—"

"I'll not interfere with you."

"Even if I decide to marry a county teacher?"

"We can deal with that contingency when it comes up."

"All right, then."

The two men left the schoolhouse together.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. Creighton took St. Croix to task for his misleading description of the school teacher.

"How you ever got the idea that she was illiterate, common—"

"But she is!"

"We can't possibly be talking of the same person!"

"The person I'm talking of is Miss Schwenckton, the teacher of William Penn school, the niece of the farmer, Sam Schwenckton. I had doughnuts and coffee with her and Sam Schwenckton and his wife in their very own kitchen the night my watch was taken from me!"

"I don't understand it at all!" complained his father. "Barring the fact that the girl accepted a bribe from me, I'd call her a thoroughbred!"

The puzzle seemed insolvable.

Meantime, Marvin was feeling by no means so lenient toward Miss Schwenckton's accepting that money from his father as he had pretended. In spite, however, of the sick recoil he felt from her for departing with that five thousand dollars, the sight of her schoolhouse when he drove past it, now occupied by her efficient, informed and uninteresting successor, gave him a pang that every day grew sharper; a restless longing that was in danger of increasing to an insatiable hunger.

St. Croix, meantime, had just about reached a stage where he was on the point of defying prudence and trying to see Meely once more; and Marvin was contemplating the probable folly and futility of his asking his board for a leave of absence to go to Hollywood, when a cablegram which their mother received just at this time from England diverted them somewhat from their absorption in their own misery.

The cablegram was from Mrs. Creighton's cousin, Sir John St. Croix, announcing that his daughter, Baroness Sylvia St. Croix, would sail for America on the Berengaria on January 2 for a short visit to her American cousins. She could be identified at the boat by a handkerchief tied on her left wrist.

This news threw the family into some excitement. St. Croix volunteered to go to New York to meet the ship. He, however, demanded of Marvin that he leave him a clear field.

"I can at least safely promise you," said Marvin, "that I'll keep out of it unless—until," he corrected himself, "she turns you down."

CHAPTER X

As St. Croix' longing for Meely was never for a moment associated in his mind with the idea of marriage, it did not in the least dampen the zest with which he went to New York to meet—as he confidentially hoped and believed—his prospective bride. This would be a marriage so exactly to his taste!—allied to an old English family of rank, administering a distinguished old estate that for generations had been in the family.

His experience with girls gave him no reason to doubt that he would find favor with his noble kinswoman. So, it was with a complacent self-confidence that, well-groomed and clad in his smartest clothes, he stood on the wharf on the afternoon of the arrival of the Berengaria and with tense expectation watched the passengers file past him down the gang-plank—his eyes searching for a young girl with a handkerchief on her left wrist.

He did hope she would be good-looking. It would be an awful wet blanket if she turned out to be ill-favored; though nothing short of an actual hump would stop him. A man could of course seek his consolations outside his home—

It did not occur to him, naturally, that his wife might have need of consolations and compensations.

Looking for a wrist bound with a handkerchief proved to be rather a maddening business. Wrists could be examined only as the passengers passed close before him, while faces could be scanned halfway up the gangplank.

A procession of men and elderly women sent his gaze far up the plank in search of more young people—when suddenly his eye was caught by a lovely face at the top of the long slope which struck him as vaguely familiar—yet unfamiliar, too, in its vivacious expression, its intelligence, its delicacy. Surely he had seen that face somewhere before—though the poise of an exquisite small head, the general look and air of a thoroughbred, the modish style of the young woman, were not familiar.

Why! She looked like Meely Schwenckton! How strange—and how absurd! At least her features did—extraordinarily like!—yet so widely different, too, with that vivid, intelligent countenance, proudly arched little head, graceful bearing—and of course her neatly arranged hair, stylish clothing. But good G—d, how like Meely she looked!

"Am I seeing things?" he wondered, his heart beating thickly.

So close she passed him by that her arm brushed his and her eyes looked for an instant straight into his—but not the trembling of a lash nor the least quiver of her lips suggested that she had ever seen him before, as she walked on to mingle with the crowd—leaving him bewildered, confounded, with a weird doubt and uncertainty—when suddenly, as his gaze followed her, she lifted her hand to straighten her hat, which in the crowd had been pushed askew—and he saw, with a wild bounding of his heart, that her wrist was tied up with a handkerchief!

In an instant he was at her side and had seized her hand—the confusion of his mind so great that all his usual self-confidence was lost in a floundering muddle. He had been so sure of himself, of his ability to impress favorably even a sophisticated English aristocrat with his ease and sang-froid—and he was painfully aware that no country bumpkin could have been more awkward.

River Kept in Order by Chinese Engineer

In view of the disastrous Mississippi floods it is interesting to note that 2,100 years ago a Chinese engineer, Li-ping, laid down the correct engineering principle for controlling the flood conditions of a river flowing through a flat alluvial plain.

The works that he and his sons established for controlling the waters of the Min river in Czechwan province and distributing them across the great Chengtu plain are still in perfect operation. The Chengtu plain is an area 100 miles long and sixty miles wide. Across this plain the Min river is distributed in eight main branches, converging at the lower end of the plain to form a single river again, which empties into the Yangtze above the Gorges.

Throughout the 2,100 years, the engineering principle laid down by Li-ping, without which the whole system would have destroyed itself centuries ago, has been followed. Flood conditions are still unknown. On the walls of the temple built to the memory of Li-ping and his sons at Kuan-hsien, is written this saying, familiar to every Chinese student: "Shen tao t'an tso yen," meaning "Dig the bed deep, keep the banks low."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Antiquity of Bagpipes

Jacques de Morgan, during his excavations in Persia, found some terra cotta figures, dating from the Eighth century B. C., playing on what appear to be bagpipes. Again we find the bagpipe in Persia in the Sixth century A. D. on the great arch at Takht-i-Bostan. While crude, the representation serves as evidence that the bagpipe was in use during the 14 centuries which elapsed between the time the terra cotta figures discovered by De Morgan were molded and the carving in the rock at Takht-i-Bostan.

What's the Use

Lucien Hubbard, a supervisor of M. G. M. productions, was patiently explaining the wonders of Yosemite to the leading lady of his company while they were "on location" in the wonder park. "Yes," he explained, pointing to El Capitan, "that was undoubtedly left there by some giant glacier."

"But where is the glacier?" asked the girl doubtfully.

"Gone back for another rock!" snorted the disgusted Hubbard—Los Angeles Times.

How Much Water Should Baby Get?
A Famous Authority's Rule
By Ruth Brittain

Baby specialists agree nowadays, that during the first six months, babies must have three ounces of fluid per pound of body weight daily. An eight-pound baby, for instance, needs twenty-four ounces of fluid. Later on the rule is two ounces of fluid per pound of body weight. The amount of fluid absorbed by a breast-fed baby is best determined by weighing him before and after feeding for the whole day; and it is easily calculated for the bottle-fed one. Then make up any deficiency with water.

Giving baby sufficient water often relieves his feverish, crying, upset and restless spells. If it doesn't, give him a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. For these and other ills of babies and children such as colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, sour stomach, loss of sleep, underweight, etc., leading physicians say there's nothing so effective. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper—and millions of mothers have depended on it in over thirty years of ever increasing use. It regulates baby's bowels, makes him sleep and eat right, enables him to get full nourishment from his food, so he increases in weight as he should. With each package you get a book on Motherhood worth its weight in gold.

Just a word of caution. Look for the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher on the package so you'll be sure to get the genuine. The forty-cent bottles contain thirty-five doses.

Best method of having your own way is to keep still about it.

Trees of Past Ages in Botanical Garden

Seedling trees of a species that represents the vegetation of Florida 100,000 years ago, during the glacial epoch, have been added to the collection in the New York Botanical garden as the result of a scientific tour of the state by Dr. John K. Small. The trees, which are known as Torreya, or locally as Savern, belong to the botanical genus Tumion, and occur naturally in a small strip of territory along the east bank of the Appalachicola river, in the Florida panhandle. They occur nowhere else in the world, though related species are found in California, Japan and China. They resemble yew trees in some ways, and can be cultivated under the same sort of climatic conditions that favor the yew.

A WONDERFUL NORSE-AMERICAN MEMORIAL

The Erection of a $3,500,000 Structure in Minneapolis, To Serve As a Hotel, Museum and Library, Marks The Realization of a Beautiful Ideal.

BY MARTIN W. ODLAND
Author of "The Life of Knute Nelson", "The Saga of the Norsemen in America", etc.

Minneapolis, Minnesota. — A vast monument in honor of their forefathers, looming beautiful and impressive above the Minneapolis skyline, a source of pride and inspiration to all Americans of Norse descent—that is the true meaning of THE NORDIC, planned by a group of prominent Norwegian-Americans of the Northwest, who have already formed an association for the raising of the necessary capital and the realization of the noble project.

All things considered, it is one of the most inspiring undertakings in the history of the Norse people of America. It is a proposal by men of large vision and high aspirations, but of sound judgment, who have their feet on the ground. That is why the great building is to be a practical business enterprise as well as a magnificent memorial—a safe and profitable financial investment, instead of a burden.

THE NORDIC

All who have kept abreast of the times know that in recent years there has been a remarkable development in the hotel industry. In New York, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles and all the other big cities enormous sums have been invested in hotels by shrewd, hard-headed capitalists. They realize that since this became the automobile age the world is constantly on the go and that the building of hotels has not kept pace with the demands of the traveling public.

THE NORDIC will be the grandest hotel in the Northwest. It will rise eighteen stories above the street level and the beauty of its architecture will make it one of the principal showplaces of Minneapolis. It will be the hotel for which everybody in the city will boost, for experience proves that every enterprise or institution of which the residents of a city are proud is the one they always recommend.

Minneapolis offers a splendid opening for another first-class, modern hotel, as the city has lagged behind communities of its class in catering to the wants of the traveling world. Minnesota is rapidly coming to the front as the summer playground of America. The beauty of its Ten Thousand Lakes and its invigorating summer climate are drawing more and more people from all parts of the country and even from abroad. All these summer tourists pass through Minneapolis and most of them spend considerable time here. It was therefore inevitable that men of foresight would plan such a hotel as THE NORDIC.

But the building of a great hotel to meet a need, however urgent, is not the chief purpose of the incorporators of the Nordic Hotel Association. "Naturally I have no interest in giving any of my crowded time to the erection of a mere hotel," says the Rev. Dr. J. A. O. Stub, president of the board of directors, "but I have always been interested in, and impressed with, keeping alive the memory of the people from whom I have sprung."

So, first and foremost THE NORDIC will stand as an impressive memorial to the Norwegian pioneers of America—those strong, patient, heroic men and women who suffered and endured the severest hardships that their children and later descendants might prosper and be happy. The story of the famous voyage of the sloop "Restaurationen," which brought the first little group of emigrants from Norway, in 1825, and of the founding of the first Norwegian-American colonies, in New York, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, the Dakotas and westward to the Pacific, is one of the inspiring chapters in the annals of America—though hitherto ignored by all authors of histories of the United States—and nothing could be more fitting than to rear a monument to our Norse forefathers in America so impressive that none can ignore it or overlook the services they rendered.

Next, THE NORDIC will serve as a monument to the Nordic race as a whole. "A great inheritance it is for the man to come of a worthy people," said Asmund Olafson Vinje. The saga of the Norsemen stamps them as a strong, clean, forward-looking people. They have been pathfinders and pioneers, not only in America, but also in the eastern hemisphere. They were among the first, if not the first, to organize parliamentary systems of government, and the scholars of Iceland point with pride to the fact that their parliament is the oldest in the world.

As explorers the Vikings rendered services of inestimable value. They were the first navigators to venture out of sight of land and were the discoverers of pelagic navigation. It was this that led to their discovery of America. First they went from Norway to Iceland; thence to Greenland, and finally to Vinland the Good. Had it not been for the hostile Indians and the awful Black Death, thousands of prosperous and contented Norsemen would have been on this continent when Columbus was born.

Wherever they went the Norsemen distinguished themselves. During the Crusades they led the van of chivalry in rescuing the holy sepulcher from the Saracens. They founded Normandy in France, which soon became the most progressive community in all Europe. In 1215, it was their descendants who took King John of England by the neck and wrung from him the celebrated Magna Charta, the beginning of real constitutional government, or government by the people, in Great Britain. Later the same germ of liberty which they brought from Normandy budded in the Bill of Rights, and five hundred years later blossomed into perfect flowers in our Declaration of Independence and the constitution of the United States.

The cultural achievements of the Norsemen were equally important. The sagas and the eddas are the most beautiful, most virile literature of the Middle Ages, and, besides, are of great value to historians, shedding, as they do, a flood of light on customs and conditions in most of the European countries at a time when the world was in darkness. Our knowledge of Teutonic mythology is largely founded upon the eddas.

Again, THE NORDIC will serve as a center for Norwegian intercourse and for uplifting festivities, both social and intellectual. All sorts of Nordic organizations will have their headquarters here. Scarcely a week will pass without some Norse convention, meeting or banquet within its towering walls.

To enhance its value as a meeting place for clubs of various kinds, and for societies for the advancement of culture, and to make it a congenial home for men and women who prefer life in a comfortable hotel, THE NORDIC will contain a large library and museum, in charge of a recognized Nordic scholar. Here will be found the works of every author of standing in Norway, both in the mother language and in English translations, if translations have been made; here will be every book written by Norwegian-Americans, whether in English or Norwegian, many of them autographed by the authors; here will be Norwegian and Norwegian-American art-works; here will be interesting, historical remains; in brief, here will be found all those things that reveal the cultural history and development of the Norse people, particularly in America.

The Nordic race in America is becoming more and more self-conscious, notwithstanding the increasing difficulty of keeping alive the language of the fathers. The wonderful success of the Norse-American Centennial is evidence of this.

Further evidence of this racial consciousness is the organization of the Norwegian-American Historical Association. Though less than three years old, its membership is already nation-wide and there is a keen interest in its activities and proceedings.

The conception back of THE NORDIC is largely the same as that which gave birth to the Norse-American Centennial and the Norwegian-American Historical Association. The interest and enthusiasm for Nordic history and culture aroused by the Centennial and the Historical Association have lent vigor to the demand for just such an institution as THE NORDIC, which will stand as an inspiring and enduring monument to the men and women whose deeds and accomplishments were celebrated by the Centennial and is being chronicled by the Association.

THE NORDIC will bring joy to the Norsemen of America, especially those of the Northwest who make frequent visits to Minneapolis. Distinguished Norwegian-American scholars and authors, political leaders, pastors and business men have accepted with alacrity and enthusiasm the opportunity of sponsoring the enterprise, as all look upon it as the realization of a beautiful ideal, which will be of untold value to the race. Among those who sent their congratulation and best wishes to the board of directors of the association promoting the enterprise are Professor Rasmus B. Anderson, the veneral scholar, author and former United States minister to Denmark; Governor A. G. Sorlie of North Dakota; Hon. O. J. Kvale, Minnesota congressman; Professor Julius E. Olson, head of the Scandinavian department of the University of Wisconsin; Reverend D. G. Ristad, president of the Norwegian-American Historical Association, and well known poet; Professor O. E. Rolvaag of St. Olaf College, the author; Professor O. M. Norlie of Luther College, author and scholar; Hjalmar R. Holand, author and sponsor of the famous Kensington runestone; Hon. H. A. Ustrud, former state superintendent of South Dakota; Hon. O. P. B Jacobson, chairman of the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission; E. G. Quamme, St. Paul financier, formerly president of the St. Paul federal land bank; Hon. J. H. Dahl, mayor of Fargo; Lars Christianson, prominent Fargo business man and others too numerous to mention.

The building, together with the site, furnishings and working capital, will represent an investment of approximately $3,500,000.

Unblocking by Declarer

HERE are two deals illustrating unblocking by declarer in his own hand. The bidding of the first deal also is of interest:

South deals and as his hand is so very strong in hearts and weak in spades he decides to preempt. In determining how high to go he counts his sure tricks—adds one for his diamond suit and two to come from his partner and bids four hearts. All pass.

♠—Q, 4

◇—K, J, 7
♣—0

West leads the Ace of clubs, dummy is spread, and declarer examines the hands. His only chance of discarding his losing spades is upon dummy's clubs, and for this he may need two entry cards in dummy. His only possible way of getting into dummy is in the trump suit. The Jack is one entry card and he sees that if the adversaries' trumps are all exhausted in two leads he can get into dummy again with the seven spot provided he saves a small one in his own hand. He therefore plays accordingly as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	CA	C3	C2	H9
2	H5	H2	D2	HA
3	H6	H7	D3	H3
4	C4	CK	C8	S6

10	DA	D4	D10	DK
11	DQ	D6	S10	DJ
12	S7	S4	SA	HQ
13	SK	SQ	SJ	HK

Declarer wins five odd tricks.

At trick 2 declarer finds that West has both of the remaining adverse hearts, the six and the eight; therefore dummy's seven and Jack both become entry cards. At trick 6 declarer must again use a high trump, saving the four to put dummy in the lead again to make the remaining clubs.

In diamonds he must lead up to West's major tenace and so loses two tricks.

In the following deal South obtains the declaration by a bid of one heart:

♠—9, 6, 4
♡—9, 7
◇—A, 7, 5
♣—J, 8, 7, 5, 2

♡—A, Q, J, 10, 2
◇—Q, 6, 3
♣—A, K, 4

West leads the Ace of spades and after dummy is spread declarer examines the hands. In order to finesse the hearts and catch the King if East holds it he is likely to have to lead twice from dummy and he has but one entry card there. How can it be done? After a moment's study he sees that his nine of hearts is just as good as his Queen because he holds all of the intervening cards; therefore, if he leads the nine he can pass it through and in this way get a second lead through East. To do this, however, he must be sure to trump the spade (if it is led the third time) with his ten of hearts, and save the deuce with which to duck under the nine. He now proceeds and plays the hand as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	SA	S4	S5	S3
2	S2	S6	SK	S7
3	S10	S9	S8	H10
4	D4	DA	D2	D3

6	H6	H7	H5	HJ
7	H8	D5	HK	HA
8	C3	C2	C6	CA
9	C9	C5	CQ	CK
10	C10	CJ	D8	C4
11	D9	C8	D10	D6
12	DJ	C7	SJ	DQ
13	SQ	D7	DK	HQ

Declarer wins five odd tricks.

It so often is necessary to have a small trump for use as illustrated in this hand that many players make it a rule to save the smallest one when trumping in for the first time in a deal whether or not they can foresee any need of doing so. There can be no harm in it when holding so many high ones, and the need for it often develops after the first play. This is a point well worth remembering and incorporating in your practice.

The Bitter Truth

Conversation during lesson time was strictly forbidden, but the eagle-eyed teacher, long past her first youth, detected a girl speaking to her neighbor. Immediately she haled the culprit forth and demanded that the subject of conversation be revealed.

The pupil maintained a stubborn silence. Neither threats nor cajolings would shake her determination, and finally she was sent back to her seat.

Before class was dismissed the teacher again tried to enforce her authority.

"You shall tell what you said, if we both stay here until midnight," she declared emphatically.

"Well," confessed the culprit reluctantly, "I was only telling Mary that you dyed your hair."—Vancouver Province.

Expect Banded Birds to Explain Mystery

Bird enthusiasts, who wish to help solve the mysteries of bird migration, will have plenty of employment trying to get returns on the 270,000 birds that have been banded under the auspices of the United States biological survey. Returns on banded birds, according to Frederick C. Lincoln, in charge of this activity of the survey, now amount to 10,338 cases. Knowledge of the movements of the bird after its first banding, gained from these return reports, enables ornithologists to get precise information concerning bird migration, a mystery that has puzzled mankind since the time of Aristotle. Ducks supply the most returns, Mr. Lincoln said. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that many banded waterfowl are taken by the millions of hunters in the field during the hunting season. Prominent among the bird problems of economic interest which banding may be expected to solve, Mr. Lincoln points out, is the control of red-winged blackbirds that do much damage to the rice crop of the South and of California in late summer and early fall.

Chicks get from Purina LIFE and GROWTH~

FROM the time chicks step out of their shells, they look to you for protection and care to live and thrive. Poultry yard facts show that more than 90% of the chicks fed Purina Startena and Purina Baby Chick Chow live and grow rapidly into plump broilers and early laying pullets. Isn't it sound business economy to feed Purina, which saves 9 out of 10, instead of average mixtures on which 5 out of 10 chicks die? Come in and let us show you how to save chicks and get them to early maturity.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXIII

THE SILO: A silo is a good investment for a herd of 10 or more cows. It saves both feed and labor. When corn is shocked in the field and fed in the bundle there is commonly a waste of from 20 to 30 per cent of the stalk that remains uneaten. Silage is easily and quickly fed. Bundle corn is often most disagreeable to handle, especially in the winter. Animals fed silage keep in better thrift.

There are many kinds of silos, wooden, tile and cement. All are good when properly built. There should be a solid foundation extending well in the ground and made of rich concrete. A wooden silo should be well anchored and all silos should have strong roofs. A silo 15 feet in diameter and 50 feet high will hold 105 tons and provide feed for 10 to 15 cows and young stock during the stall feeding period.

Address University Farm, St. Paul, for silo bulletin.

Doing Big Business

A week ago last Monday the creamery started to pay cash for eggs and the results are gratifying to the board. The first day 885½ dozen were received and $203.65 paid out in cash. The business at the creamery for the first week was 70 cases or 2100 dozen and $483.00 were paid out during the week. Those eggs grading Land O'Lakes will be paid a premium at the end of the month by the association, which may be 2 or 4 cent more.

The fact that the Association started to handle eggs has caused the local price level to raise. The creamery is paying 23 cents cash while Badger and Warroad where the Association is not yet operating, eggs are only 22cents. Before the creameries at Roseau and Greenbush started to handle eggs the local price was lower than now and the Chicago and Minneapolis markets higher.

Now the local price is higher and the Chicago and Minneapolis markets are lower.

The business men are to be congratulated upon their fine support in turning their eggs over to the Association. In this manner they are handling the eggs on a non-profit basis.

GOOD SEED OATS

The Proper Choice of Varieties Important.

THERE are numerous commercial varieties of oats. These represent strains of a relatively small number of distinct botanical varieties. Many farmers do not know that two strains of oats may be identical in appearance and yet differ greatly in yielding power. The most satisfactory measure of the value of a variety or strain is its yield in bushels per acre, if its quality is good.

Improved early Varieties yield Well.

THE Kherson variety was introduced from Russia in 1896 by the Nebraska Agricultural Experiment Station, and the Sixty-Day variety from the same country in 1901 by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. These varieties have served as a source for one of the most important groups of oat varieties grown in the United States.

Among the outstanding improved early varieties developed as selections from the Kherson and Sixty-Day, are the Albion (Iowa No. 103), Gopher, Iowar, and Richland (Iowa No. 105). Similar varieties which have attained some importance are Cole, Nebraska No. 21, and State Pride. The Iogold, first distributed to farmers of Iowa in 1927, is a most promising new rust-resistant selection. Heavy epidemics of stem rust of oats in sections of the Corn Belt in 1926 and 1927, have emphasized the value of rust-resistant varieties such as Richland and Iogold.

Midseason Varieties.

IN the northern part of the Corn Belt varieties maturing in midseason are sometimes preferable to the early sorts. Those which have been standard for years are Silvermine, Swedish Select, Lincoln, Green Russian, etc. In recent years the Victory has become of considerable importance, although it is rather too late in maturity for much of the Corn Belt. Among the improved midseason varieties are Miami, Iogren, Minota, Wisconsin Wonder, Wolverine, Worthy, etc.

Essex Coach Burned

While driving to Fertile last Sunday, Henry Oien and family of Thief River had the misfortune of having their Essex coach turn over into the road ditch about three miles north of Red Lake Falls. After turning over the car burst into flames which destroyed it entirely.

Mr. and Mrs. Oien and their five children escaped without injuries to any of them as they crept out of the mess of broken glass and twisted car body.

New Dresses for The School Girl

By MAE MARTIN

Thousands of mothers with daughters of high school or college age, have problems like this Little Rock, Arkansas, mother. She says: "I don't believe I could have put my daughter through the last two years of high school and college without the help of Diamond Dyes. Dresses long out of style and faded were made new with a package or so of Diamond Dyes and the addition of a few dozen buttons and a little braid. Sometimes two dresses were combined and brought up to date in lines that gave no hint of their past. People never knew they were redyed when I used Diamond Dyes. They never take the life out of cloth or make it limp. They always make things fresh, crisp and bright."

Diamond Dyes are true dyes, like those used when the cloth was made. Tinting with them is as easy as bluing, and dyeing only takes a little more time. Insist on Diamond Dyes and save disappointment. They never streak, spot or run.

My handsome new book, "Color Craft," will help you with your clothes and home furnishing problems. Sixty-four pages of dollar-saving suggestions, fully illustrated in colors. It's FREE. Simply write Mae Martin, Home Service Dept., Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

There for Life

Max Kimich, the comedy director from across the pond, strayed into a fashionable Los Angeles restaurant and was amazed at the number of fair women at the nearby tables. Just then the waiter came for his order.

"Do I understand," asked the enraptured Max, "that a customer is permitted to remain here until he has eaten what he has ordered?"

"Why, certainly!" answered the puzzled waiter.

"Then," said Max, his eye roving once more, "bring me a stick of chewing gum."

The medicines that will do for me what the Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done are certainly worth their weight in gold. PLAIN OF PHILIPPI WILL BE REDEEMED

Has Historic Associations of Caesar and St. Paul.

Washington.—The plain of Philippi, which knew St. Paul and where, after the assassination of Julius Caesar, the Roman republican forces lost their battle with the imperialists, is the latest bit of Greece in which it is planned to rout marshes and malaria and to substitute agriculture and health.

Philippi is one of the numerous plains near the mouths of rivers on the northern shores of the Aegean sea, where careless Turkish agriculture permitted rich soil to become water-logged and marshy.

Since Greece received several million extra inhabitants as a result of the forced trek of Greeks from Turkish territory, the National Geographic society says, plans have been formulated to salvage these marshy areas of Macedonia by drainage. The valley of the Varda, near Salonika, was the area first attacked by the engineers. The plain of Philippi lies 50 miles to the east of Salonika in the valley of the little river, Angista. Ten miles south is the seashore with its port of Kavala.

Over the plain, on a rocky hill, are the ruins of the city of Philippi, named for Phillip II, of Macedon. It was to converts in Philippi, after his visit and imprisonment there, that St. Paul wrote his epistle to the Philippians.

In connection with the project for draining the plain of Philippi, the Greek government also will drain the territory slightly to the west in the Struma River valley. Close to the sea this valley is occupied by Lake Ahinos, the small remnant of a once great lake. About it are marshy regions. Farther up the valley the entire basin is intensively cultivated, constituting some of the best agricultural land in Greece. When the Philippi and Struma projects are completed, Lake Ahinos and its marshes will have disappeared.

300,000,000 Bodies in Cemeteries of U. S.

Chicago.—More than 4,500,000 acres of land have been set aside in the United States for cemeteries and graveyards, according to a report submitted here at the annual state convention of the National Selected Morticians.

There are 89,000 burial plots in America, including village churchyards and large city cemeteries, the report indicates. Based upon an average size of 50 acres each, which is considered a conservative estimate, they would approximate the size of the land area in Connecticut, Delaware and Rhode Island combined.

"A village graveyard having as its patrons 500 persons contains upon an average of 650 graves after three generations. With this as a basis the United States has in excess of 200,000,000 bodies lying in legitimate graves," said Porter Loring of San Antonio, addressing the morticians.

Cats to Be Used to Save Bumblebees From Mice

Yakima, Wash.—Wanted—Cats to eat the field mice that eat bumblebees that help to pollenize melons and tomatoes in the Northwest.

The crop failure in recent years in sections of the Northwest where tomatoes and melons are grown extensively is laid to the scarcity of bumblebees. No other insect has the strength to force open the calyx of a tomato blossom as the big buzzing bee.

Bumblebees make their nests at the roots of certain weeds and shrubs in open fields. They are the victims of field mice that eat the adult insects as well as the honey larvae. Field mice are likewise destructive by gnawing, and have increased at an alarming rate in all parts of the west coast states.

Paris Faces Loss of Fashion Title to U. S.

Paris, France.—Paris needs an academy of style or America will usurp the rule of French fashion, warns the newspaper Paris-Midi.

The paper complains that the foreign buyer is "king" and that it will not be long before he will impose American ideas of style on Paris designers. Then when Paris makes gowns on American lines America will take the mannikins across the Atlantic, hire the French designers and run the world of fashion, the newspaper prophesies.

The newspaper would have this new academy, like the renowned Academie Francaise, support the traditions of style just as the Immortals maintain the language.

Blame Heavy Rainfall on Activity of Radio

Matlock, England.—Radio is blamed for the excessive rainfall by many residents of this town who are framing a petition asking that its use be suspended a month.

For some time the mornings have been fine and afternoons rainy, with the result that many persons attribute the bad weather to wireless activity.

CLAIM DUPES SLAIN FOR TEXAS BOUNTY

Ranger Charges Murder Machine Is Operating.

Austin, Texas.—Gov. Dan Moody has advised Capt. Frank Hamer of the state ranger force to go before the grand jury of the counties in which he alleges men have been killed by peace officers on frameups to secure the head bounty of $5,000 each offered by the Texas Bankers' association.

Captain Hamer's signed statement, in which he charged that there was a murder machine in operation in Texas, staging fake bank holdups to collect these rewards, has created a stir in banking circles and he says he is willing to go before the grand jury and submit the information which he has collected to support his charges.

He even went so far as to say that he has in his possession the name of the man who is at the head of the ring that is framing innocent men and bringing about their murder in order that unprincipled peace officers may profit by the blood money given by the Texas Bankers' association.

Scalp Bounty.

"The present situation in Texas," he said, "parallels that of the scalp bounty which was offered by the Mexican government when the Apaches and Comanches spread terror in northern Mexico. American adventurers went to Mexico and engaged in the business of killing the preying Indians, collecting the $100 bounty for each scalp. When the Apaches and Comanches became scarce, the hunters took the scalps of the natives they were supposed to protect, there being a strong resemblance between the scalps of a Mexican and a Texas Apache. It was much safer to kill a Mexican sheep herder than to engage in battle with an Apache warrior.

"It is worth noting that most of the successful bandit killings have been at night. It so happens that it is not a capital offense to rob a bank at night, that is, without firearms and without endangering human life. The bankers have paid $20,000 for the killing of night robbers who have not committed capital offenses, and have paid $5,000 for daylight work, where many lives were endangered.

"In one instance two men were killed who had nothing with them that would enable them to get into the vault of the bank once they were inside the building.

"Repeatedly men who have been killed were not professional bank robbers. They were identified by finger prints and there was nothing against them.

Torch Is Useless.

"In one instance the men killed did have in their possession an acetylene torch of the kind used by experienced bank robbers, but it was impossible to find, either on the person of the dead or anywhere about, tips for this torch. Without these tips the torch was as useless as a flashlight without a battery or bulb, or as a gun without ammunition.

"It is unreasonable to suppose that men who know the bank robbing game would undertake it without the proper tools and equipment.

"The public, because of ignorance of the true situation, gives its support to the killing of these men not knowing the circumstances under which they were killed. The public applauds the banker for his liberality, the slayer for his courage, and all are happy, including the genuine bank robber.

"The reward of $5,000 has aroused the greed and desire of men who have more love for money than for human life, and who are, besides, unscrupulous enough to do anything that will bring them money without too much risk of personal danger.

"Young men, drifters and loafers, whose principal traits are weakness of character, combined with certain reckless spirit, are lured by the unscrupulous ones into bank robbery only to be shot to death by officers who have been 'tipped off' to the 'robbery.' Those killed are not the professional bank robbers at all, and in most cases have not a single qualification for that work."

Captain Hamer said that his purpose in investigating the deaths at the hands of officers of men who were in his opinion innocent of any attempt at committing a crime is to prevent the death of others.

Kill 1,000 Wild Horses as Food for Tame Foxes

Toppenish, Wash.—One thousand wild horses rounded up in central and north Washington reached here recently for the Products company, manufacturing fox food, leather goods and bone meal. Once Reynard, from his seclusion, looked out on a herd of wild steeds and wished he was stout enough to kill one for breakfast. Nowdays fox farmers on the islands off the Alaskan coast buy fresh horse meat trimmings for their fox, mink and ermine proteges.

The product is made from healthy wild horses killed under government supervision. The material is shipped North regularly from Seattle and costs the fur farmers about $7.50 a hundred pounds plus freight. Cut fresh bone and horse fat goes to west coast poultry farms.

New York.—A girl cashier in a hotel worried and worried when her cash was $90 short. Then an affable young man came along and said he got $90 too much when a check was cashed for him. He was Mark Koenig, Yanks' shortstop.

CAT-EYED TOAD FIGHTS MOSQUITO

Science to Use Pollywogs in Fight on Pests.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—A cat-eyed, pug-nosed toad is man's new ally in the war against mosquitoes.

It is the spadefoot toad of the western plains and his legions are being mobilized for movement to mosquito-infested areas in the East.

Studies made by Ralph J. Gilmore, professor of biology at Colorado college, revealed that the spadefoot toad, unlike other frogs, is carnivorous in the tadpole stage. The pollwogs prey on mosquito larvae in shallow pools and for this reason they are expected to destroy the insects before they take wing and molest mankind.

Fighting mosquitoes by getting a higher animal to attack their larvae is not a new method, Professor Gilmore says. Fish have been used for that purpose, but, he points out, they cannot enter the shallow, stagnant marshes in which the spadefoot toads, with a life cycle of only forty days, multiply rapidly.

Environment has forced the tadpole to change from the herbivorous habit of its ancestors to its peculiar carnivorous characteristic, Professor Gilmore believes, because of the scarcity of vegetable life in the waters of its habitat, which includes Arizona, Colorado, Montana, North Dakota and Idaho. The professor has found these frogs sparsely distributed, but abundant in limited areas.

The adult toad is small, being only two inches long. Its finely-textured skin is yellowish olive to dark gray. The frog gets its name from the horny spades, about one-eighth of an inch long, on the inner sides of its feet. With these spades it burrows into the ground to a depth of a few inches to several feet. It remains hidden during the dry seasons, and reappears after rains.

The pools of water that dot the prairies are kept virtually free of mosquitoes by the tadpoles, so much so that Professor Gilmore says he has experienced difficulty in obtaining larvae of the insect for his experiments.

Artificial Sun Baths Given London's Dogs

London.—Violet-ray artificial sun baths for house dogs have been inaugurated by a Mayfair chemist who charges five shillings per treatment.

Scores of fashionable women with their pets in their arms line up in the shop on misty mornings. The chemist's business, started only a few weeks ago, has increased to such an extent that he has arranged for additional space, to be devoted exclusively to the sun ray apparatus for dogs only.

The dogs appear to enjoy the process, after they become accustomed to the lamps, and usually take a nap as they would at home before a fireplace.

German Clock Announces Midnight by Striking 24

Berlin.—When a clock strikes as high as thirteen it is ordinarily assumed that there is something wrong with it.

This is no longer so in Freienwalde, Brandenburg. The clock in the tower of St. George's church there not only has been equipped with a dial running up to twenty-four, but the striking mechanism has been altered so that the clock strikes up to twenty-four—twenty-four times at midnight!

The twenty-four-hour system was introduced for the German railways and post office, but Freienwalde is the first place to accept all the consequences of it.

Lure Wolves to Death by Phonograph Records

Montreal.—Wolves which have killed hundreds of Canadian sheep this year may be lured to death by phonograph records of their own howls if the Ontario government adopts the suggestion of Manitoulin island farmers.

Hard hit by the depredation of roving wolf packs, these farmers say, the wolves could be exterminated if records of their howls were played in the bush. When the animals, which are noted for their curiosity, approach the decoy, they could be killed by concealed hunters, the farmers say.

The farmers also propose that the bounty on wolf pelts, now $15, be doubled.

Flight Restores Hearing to Gettysburg Veteran

Washington.—Colonel John K. P. Scott, of Gettysburg, Pa., an eighty-four-year-old veteran of the Civil war, stepped out of an airplane at Hoover field here exclaiming in high glee that he had regained his hearing while in the air. The veteran, who has devoted much time to a history of the battle of Gettysburg, flew from his home here on his way to the Soldiers' Home hospital at Hampton, Va., where he intends to submit to an operation.

"I don't have to read your lips any more," he told Joseph H. Himes, Washington clubman who met him at the field. "We were up 2,000 feet when I felt my eustachian tubes open."

"DEVIL JOHN" NOW LIVES IN PEACE

Kentucky Gunman Admits Seven Notches on Gun.

Pound, Va.—"Devil John" Wright, from whom John Fox, Jr., drew his fiction character, "Devil Judd" Tolliver, after living a strenuous life as Indian fighter, warrior, performer in John Robinson's shows, federal detective and leader of the notorious Wright feud gang of eastern Kentucky, has settled down at the eastern base of the Cumberland mountains to live in peace and quiet. He is now seventy-six; recently he served a short term as deputy sheriff of Wise county, Va.

"Have you killed as many men as people say you have?" he was asked recently.

"Well," he replied, his keen eyes piercing through the shadows of evening, "people tell that I've killed from seven to twenty-seven. I know positively that I have killed seven outside of war, and I may have killed more. But I didn't kill a man but what it was my duty to kill. Just after the Civil war there was too many horse thieves and murderers; somethin' had to be done. But when I went to arrest a man I always gave him a chance. Many a time I was shot at before I could open fire; didn't resort to gunfire unless I was forced to. But when I did fire I always got my man."

"Did you practice shooting a good deal?"

"Every day. I got so I could race my horse, swing under his neck three times in rapid succession and each time as I came to the top put a bullet in the middle of a tree along the road."

He ambled into the house. Soon he returned with a queer-looking revolver, well oiled and loaded.

"Here's the war gun I packed," he explained. "Best one I ever shot. Got it off a dead soldier on the bank of the Mississippi. I saw the man couldn't use it and I needed it plum bad. And, sir, she went on through several battles with Indians in the West."

Bride Tears Up License When Called a Widow

Washington.—The mystery of the fate of an absent-minded bridegroom and an irate bride, who tore up the marriage license, was solved when it became known that Raymond F. Mickum and Miss Jean Dempsey, who wouldn't get married in Maryland, were successfully united in Virginia.

The couple first appeared at the license bureau at Rockville seeking a license to wed. Mickum acted as spokesman for the pair and gave his age as thirty-three and his condition as unmarried, and said that Miss Dempsey was twenty-six and a widow. Mr. Wiley forthwith issued the license.

Mickum returned a few minutes later and said he had made a mistake, and Miss Dempsey wasn't a widow after all. Mr. Wiley suggested that she appear in person, so there wouldn't be any doubt about it this time. Miss Dempsey did return, in which Mr. Wiley described as a very rude manner, and then proceeded to tear up the license.

That spoiled their plans for getting married in Montgomery county. From Arlington county, Virginia, however, came word that they had appeared at the courthouse there, obtained a license and had been joined in matrimony.

The marriage described Miss Dempsey as single.

Brother and Sister Tortured With Fire

Huntingdon, Tenn.—Robbers using medieval methods of torture applied hot irons to the flesh of William Woodward, aged recluse and reputed miser, and his eighty-one-year-old invalid sister in a vain effort to force them to reveal the hiding place of their life savings.

After their victims had withstood the torture for three hours and Woodward lost consciousness from the pain, the intruders numbering three and described as white men, wrecked the little farm home in a search that netted them $700.

Community stories had given Woodward a reputation for possessing a hoard of gold estimated at from $5,000 to $10,000.

Turns on Gas, Wants Smoke, Blast Saves Him

Los Angeles, Calif.—A desire for one more cigarette before he passed into oblivion, so police say, saved the life of Roy Boythe, forty-eight, here recently. Roy, tired of his monotonous life, the officers say, had decided to turn on the gas.

He did.

Shortly afterward he decided to have one last cigarette.

He did.

The explosion wrecked the room and brought the police and fire departments. Boythe was placed in a cell in the psychopathic ward.

Bumps Mothers-in-Law

Berlin.—The rights of mothers-in-law do not stand so high as they might with the German federal Supreme court, the reichsgericht. Wives have precedence over them in all family disputes, says the reichsgericht in repealing a number of decisions of the lower courts in which the wives were given the edge over their husbands' mothers.

Repressed Pantomime

"The sensitiveness of old actors, who have seen better days, was forcibly brought to me the other day," says Nick Grinde, the director, "when I met up with one who had been famous at that delicate art of pantomime years ago on Broadway.

He was posing as a statue in one of Sid Grauman's prologues at $5 per diem. When he saw me he slyly explained that Sid had especially engaged him to do a solo of "repressed pantomime."

NOSES WERE OUT OF JOINT

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

THE twins were incorrigible. All the members of the Chaff family had arrived at that conclusion. They never knew what new thought was working in their fertile brains until it found expression in an act which threw the whole household out of gear.

But for once in their strenuous little lives the twins had a real heart trouble. For weeks they had whispered together with anxious faces and Grandmother Chaff scented trouble of an unknown quantity.

"Father," she said to her husband, "I wonder what ails the twins? They are troubled, nervous, keep a watchful eye on the chimney and the way they look at the sky makes me think of the weather man. Yesterday Farmer Brown's old gray goose wandered over here and they drove her into the corn crib and fastened the door. I heard Peter tell his sister that she didn't look like the right one 'because she had no baggage.' Mayme replied that she 'might have left it on the roof.' Immediately they ran up to the garret, opened the trap door and looked all over the roof. I questioned them, but could not get the slightest clew to the mystery."

"Where is the goose?" grandfather asked.

"I sent her home with Ned, and locked the crib doors," she answered. "By and by the twins peeped between the slats and were surprised to find the goose gone."

The following morning when the twins came to breakfast Grandmother Chaff was smiling mysteriously. Peter looked at his sister and whispered, "Gingerbread with sugar on it!"

"Something better than gingerbread," she whispered back. "I wish she would hurry up and tell us quick."

Suddenly Peter's face fell. "The stork!" he faltered. "She got out after all!"

Grandmother laughed, for she now understood about the goose, sky and roof mystery. She took the twins upstairs and in the old cradle that had stood empty in the garret from their earliest recollection, lay a tiny baby. Peter looked serious and Mayme began to cry.

"Well! This is a nice welcome for your new brother," Grandmother Chaff scolded, while mother looked hurt.

Peter straightened himself up, looked out of the window, then ran from the room, followed by his sobbing sister.

"Suppose that stork had brought two of them," Peter said to Mayme as they tried to grasp the new situation.

"Perhaps it will bring another," Mayme cried in sudden alarm.

"We must do something," her brother said. "Ned told me the new baby would 'put our noses out of joint' and nobody would ever care for us again. He said that is always the way when a new baby comes to a house. I can't see why mother wants that wrinkled, red, bald-headed baby."

"And he can't talk," his sister said, deprecatingly.

"We must find a way to get rid of him."

"We must not hurt him."

"We might give him to somebody who hasn't any children," Peter suggested, "but who wants him?"

Mayme thought a long while and clapped her hands as she saw a way to be rid of that unwelcome stranger. "One day Mr. Bayliss asked mother if he couldn't have me to keep, but she said she couldn't spare me. Let's give him the baby."

"Bachelors don't want babies!" Peter said wisely.

"That doesn't make any difference," Mayme protested. "We'll give him the baby the first chance we get."

The opportunity to carry off the baby did not present itself for some time. Mother was constantly in the room and grandmother would not allow them to touch the little stranger. But one night, after the twins were in bed, mother had callers in the living room downstairs and Peter decided it was time to kidnap the unwelcome intruder.

The twins crept out of bed, dressed quietly and tiptoed into the room where the baby lay asleep. Peter slipped the bottle of milk into his mouth and, taking the baby carefully in his arms, stole down the back stairs to the shed where Mayme was waiting with a basket and pillow. Baby was laid on the pillow in the basket and covered closely with the little blanket that Mayme had taken from his crib. They carried the basket through the darkness. It was a heavy burden for the children, but they finally reached the house where the gift was to be delivered. Peter knocked on the door until it was opened by a maid.

"What can I do for the two wee ones?" she asked.

"Is Mr. Bayliss at home?" Mayme inquired.

"No," the maid answered. "What is in the basket?"

"It's a secret and you must not peep." Mayme told her, with her finger on her lips.

Peter pushed the basket gently into the hall. "Give this to Mr. Bayliss" he said, and they ran away.

"Those funny little twins!" the maid said, glancing for a moment at the basket. "I wonder what they are up to now? Mr. Bayliss, here's a gift for you," she said, turning to a man who was just coming in. He stooped and lifted the lid of the basket, and dropped it again quickly as he saw the red, puckered face on the pillow.

"The wee ones left it," the maid, who had not seen the contents, explained.

Bayliss laughed. "The Chaff twins! They have kidnaped the new baby!"

The maid took the now crying baby into her arms and soothed it.

"It's rather red," the young man said, looking down at the tiny mite.

"It's going to be a pretty baby," the girl told him.

"I hope so—if I have to raise it."

The girl uncovered its little feet and kissed them. "I love it," she said softly.

"I'll give it to you," Bayliss laughed.

She sat down in a big chair and hugged the baby close to her. "We do not care whether he likes us or not, do we, baby dear?"

The man watched her with an expression of deep content as she rocked the tiny thing to sleep. He was planning a future with just such a picture in it. She, too, was dreaming. He touched her hand softly and she looked up to find his eyes compelling her.

"I love you," he said. "I just love you!" and he gathered them both in his arms.

"Don't hurt the baby," she said softly.

"Is that all you have to say to me?"

She raised her eyes and he read his title clear to the future he had planned.

In the meantime the baby had been missed and the Chaff family were nearly wild, for they had been unable to find a single clew to his disappearance. It was Ned who finally suggested that the twins might have kidnaped the baby.

"They was mighty cut up about the comin' of that baby," he said.

The twins were at once pulled out of bed and questioned. Mayme rubbed her eyes and went to sleep again, but Peter put his hand over his mouth and could not be persuaded to speak. Again Mrs. Chaff shook the little girl to awaken her and asked what they had done with the baby.

"The stork—made—"

"What did the stork do?" mother questioned.

"Made a mistake, Mrs. Bayliss—" and Mayme was fast asleep.

Just then the phone rang and Mrs. Chaff ran to answer it.

"We have your baby, Mrs. Chaff," a soft voice said. "The darling is all right and sound asleep. Shall I send Mr. Bayliss over with him?"

"I will be over at once," the mother answered, hastily hanging up the phone.

Poor Peter pulled the quilt over his head. "It is no use," he said hopelessly. "It's no use. Nobody wants him but mother. We'll have to keep him and watch that stork. It's just mean enough to leave two next time."

Mrs. Chaff hugged her baby while she listened to the story of his abduction by the twins. "They were teased about his coming," she said thoughtfully. "It is very unwise to tease children about things which may touch them more deeply than we know. I mean to be especially tender to my jealous little ones."

"I'll help solve the problem by keeping this one," Bayliss said. "He is going to be a fine boy."

She shook her head. "He might grow up to be like the twins," she laughed.

The following morning Peter and his sister saw the baby in his old place in the cradle.

"Oh," sighed Peter. "He is back again!"

"There were two of you to be fed, bathed and dressed, but I didn't mind, because I loved you," she said. "When little brother is larger I'll let you wheel him in the cart. He will soon be big enough to play with you and you'll have nice times together."

The twins were comforted. Peter examined Mayme's nose, then felt his own. "They were not out of joint," he explained to his sister, "and mother says she loves us just the same as before he came."

"I think he is going to be a very nice little brother," Mayme said, touching a tiny hand. "Mother says he looks like me."

"I am going to watch the stork," Peter said, still somewhat stubborn. "He's left enough at this house."

Roman Smiths Expert in Handling of Iron

Roman artisans in England only two or three centuries after the time of Christ knew how to weld iron and how to join or "solder" two pieces of iron together with copper, the Institute of Metals was told at its meeting in London by Profs. J. Newton Friend and W. E. Thorneycroft of the Technical college, Birmingham. The specimen examined by them was a deep iron ferrule, like a modern napkin ring, that was unearthed during excavations of the Roman city of Uriconium, located on the River Severn and destroyed about 380 A. D.

Lead pipe manufactured and laid in Rome's water system 1,800 years ago was pronounced to be in perfect condition by William A. Cowan, chemist of the National Lead company, Brooklyn, in a communication to the institute. Analysis showed that the same lead was used by the Romans in England and Italy.

Garages of Concrete Blocks Are Efficient

The concrete block garage is being received with considerable enthusiasm by home owners and builders. Concrete block permits a wide variety of architectural treatment and can be designed in keeping with almost any type of home.

With concrete block any kind of surface can be secured. The majority of manufacturers are prepared to supply several types either faced or marble chips, comparing favorably with cut stone, or surfaced to permit of stucco treatment.

A special type of concrete block is the concrete cinder block. Lighter in weight than the ordinary block, it is highly adapted to this type of construction and takes a stucco finish with a maximum of success. This block is being used in apartment construction and in the construction of homes, and its manufacture bids fair to become a highly important end of the building material line.

Many car owners make the mistake of building the garage too small, then when they dispose of their old car and secure a larger one, they find the space inadequate. An addition must be built or a new building erected, causing needless expense.

For single-car garages, an inside width of 12 feet has been found satisfactory, and for a two-car garage 20 or 22 feet. A length of less than 20 feet is seldom advisable. For larger cars, 22 to 24 feet is better. These dimensions will allow plenty of working space around the car and provide room for a small work bench, closets and shelves for car accessories across one end.

The two-car garage is becoming in- who only own one car. The extra space can usually be rented to neighbors at a profit, or comes in handy as a storage place for extra body or top. There is also the possibility that two cars will be owned at some future time. In sections where motor trucks are coming into general use the advisability of building a garage large enough for both car and truck deserves consideration. Since the dimensions of the truck are usually greater than those of the car, this fact must be taken into consideration at the outset.

Clean Floor Thoroughly Before Giving Finish

It is almost impossible to keep oak flooring looking clean and neat if it has not had the proper preliminary treatment by workmen who laid it.

In the first place the floor should be scrubbed and cleaned until every speck of dirt has been removed. Be sure there is no dust in the corners. Varnish with a high grade of varnish and let this first coat dry well.

When the second coat is dry apply the wax. Rub the wax well into the wood, using plenty of "elbow grease" and you will have a fine finish.

The scraping of hardwood floors with a knife to remove paint and varnish when preparing for a new finish can be eliminated to a great extent by the use of paint remover, a scrubbing brush and a package of ordinary kitchen cleanser.

After applying the remover to a part of the floor and thoroughly softening it, wet the brush moderately, dip it in the cleanser and apply to the floor, scrubbing vigorously. The action of the water and cleanser will remove most of the old stock and leave the

HOW SWINDLERS MARK THEIR PREY

By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

IN the field of fake investments suckers are graded according to their reaction to the appeal of glittering schemes. A name or a sucker list of investors may have a valuation anywhere from zero to $100.

W. R. MOREHOUSE.

If your name is on the list and it is known that you invariably "Investigate Before you Invest," your name is checked to indicate that you are too hard to sell to be worth cultivating further, but if you invest first and investigate afterward, your name is checked to indicate that you are easily swindled and for this reason your name is worth $100,—not to you, but to the owner of the list, for the names of those who invest without investigating are choice prospects and sell readily to promoters.

Certain names on a sucker list are checked to indicate "easy picking," and by this is meant that in addition to being ignorant on investments, those checked are not disposed to ask advice of their banker but go ahead and invest in anything from gold bricks to stock in some proposed company for the exploration of diamond fields on Mars.

Those whose names are listed are what might be called marked investors—investors who have been marked for slaughter—investors who have been marked to have their savings taken from them by unwarranted promises of fabulous riches.

If your name is on the sucker list and you are receiving "wild-cat" literature, be on your guard, for not only one but a whole tribe of "wild-cat" promoters are hot on your trail. If you are skeptical as to the extent to which they will go in order to sell you an interest in their fake schemes the following should prove illuminating, as it itemizes the literature and stationery sent to each name on a certain sucker list of investors. This literature was mailed in 91 different mailings. Each person received:

125 envelopes
13 one-page letters
22 two-page letters
6 three-page letters
2 four-page letters
52 fake newspapers containing fake write-ups
39 pieces of highly lurid prospectus material
34 return addressed postal cards
72 subscription blanks

making a total of 363 pieces of literature weighing 11 pounds and costing approximately $50. In addition to this there were numerous telephone calls and personal interviews.

In reaching for more, you may lose what you have.

Any person receiving a flood of literature calling attention to certain investment chances has a good reason for watching his step lest he weaken and invest and finally lose his savings. If you are receiving "wild-cat" investment literature it is a good indication that your name is on a sucker list and that it, with other names, is being sold to irresponsible promoters and consequently you may expect to continue to receive literature of the get-rich-quick variety from different sources. If you have ever invested in any one of the investments offered you may rest assured that you are "easy" and it is reasonably certain that as long as you live you will receive bunkum literature.

GET RICH QUICK SCHEME

Better plug it before you buy it.

Some people are so foolish as to feel complimented that so much attention is shown them by men having investments to offer. The facts are, instead of a compliment being paid them, it is a reflection on their ability to judge between a good investment and one of the bunkum variety.

If you want to draw the attention of dealers in sucker lists and of promoters of various kinds, let it be known that you have a savings bank account or good securities and you will be the object of a very vigorous campaign to relieve you of those savings.

It is always well to remember that the irresponsible promoter specializes on swindling savings depositors, exchanging his fake investment for their bank account, which is always worth 100 cents on the dollar.

Of the numerous bait schemes used to swindle the public the trading of equities in real estate is among the most successful from the promoter's standpoint.

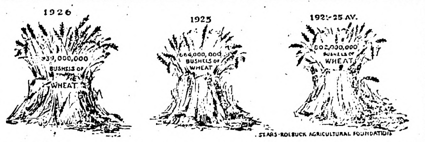
From the owner's standpoint a trade usually means getting into deeper water financially—going further into debt.

Here's how it works. If you have an equity in a piece of property, which equity you would like to be relieved of, some promoter will offer to give you credit for your equity on the purchase price of another piece of property or on the purchase of certain hot air stocks.

In the first place, the swindler actually allows you nothing for your equity as he marks up the price of what he is selling you a like amount—with the result that you lose your equity on one hand and get yourself into a less desirable deal on the other.

Proceed slowly. If you are approached with a proposition to trade an equity. It may not be exactly what you prefer, but holding the equity is far ahead of holding the sack after some swindler has dealt with you.

52 Billion Loaves in U. S. Wheat



ENOUGH wheat will be produced in the United States this year to make 52,018,000,000 loaves of bread, according to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The latest official estimates indicate that 839,000,000 bushels of wheat will be produced this year, and it is figured that 62 one-pound loaves of bread can be obtained from every bushel of wheat. Of the total estimated output 626,000,000 bushels were produced by winter wheat growers and 212,000,000 bushels by spring wheat growers in the Northwest. Last year the winter wheat production was 396,000,000 bushels and spring wheat 271,000,000. The present crop is above the five-year average of 802,000,000 bushels. The acreage devoted to the crop this year is put at 57,584,000 and the latest estimates place the production at 14.6 bushels per acre, the Foundation states. Winter wheat will run over 17 bushels per acre and spring wheat 10.2 per acre. Domestic needs are estimated at 640,000,000 bushels, so there will be more than 250,000,000 bushels for export. Prices are not as high as a year ago, but the crop probably will bring growers more than a billion dollars.

Before you select your next car see what General Motors offers

GENERAL MOTORS was organized on the principle that a group of strong companies, working together as a family, could serve the public better than they could separately.

The public has approved this principle.

In 1924 one out of every six cars chosen by the public was a General Motors car. In 1925 the proportion was one in five. In 1926 it was one in four.

And last year it was one in three.

The improvement in General Motors products is continuous. Great Research Laboratories are constantly seeking new paths for betterment. A 1245-acre Proving Ground tests all that science has discovered and proves each new design before it is offered to you. Each year there has been a steady advance in the quality, performance and beauty of General Motors cars, with no increase in price.

Uncommon Sense

EXPERIENCE

A GOVERNMENT attorney in a large American city is noted for the success he has had in prosecuting lawbreakers.

His staff is composed almost entirely of young men, some of whom are only a few months out of law school or college.

Occasionally these young men make mistakes which a lawyer of greater experience would not make. One of them did, in fact, do just this at the trial of a famous lawbreaker.

After the trial was over I asked the government attorney why he did not employ older men.

He said: "The government gives me only a few thousand dollars for each of my subordinates. Consequently I can pay them only very small salaries.

"For such a small amount I can get older men who have not been successful attorneys and who are willing to work for little pay.

"Or I can get youngsters who are just breaking into the game. Twenty years from now these same youngsters will be commanding the top salaries in the legal profession.

"Shall I get the other, experienced, mediocre lawyer or the younger, greener man?

"I have always preferred the youngster."

* * *

It has often been said that nothing takes the place of experience. Like most maxims it is subject to several qualifications.

A green man will undoubtedly make mistakes which, with more experience, he would avoid. But when it comes to a contest between experience and mediocrity on the one side and greenness and intelligence on the other I'll back the latter.

* * *

The very fact that a man has shown little promise before arriving at forty or fifty makes it probable that he will never do anything outstanding. Whereas, a young, promising fellow, green as he may be, has always possibilities.

No man, of course, likes to make his business a training school for smart youngsters. But no smart employer likes to fill his office with mediocre assistants, either.

It usually costs real money to employ brains plus experience.

Intelligent youngsters make mistakes. But they can usually more than hold their own with middle-aged mediocrity.

EDUCATION

THERE will be spent this year in this country for public instruction in grade schools and high schools about one-half billion dollars. The higher education of our country in colleges and universities will demand nearly one-third of another billion. A very large sum supplied for the larger part by taxation. This system of providing the cost of education makes it possible for every child to have at least the advantages of an elementary education. Education is a basic necessity for success in any line of work. It is a condition upon which even the procurement of some positions depend. The purpose of education, for which we pay our cold cash in taxes, is not only to provide knowledge for earning a living but the knowledge of "how to live" while that money is being earned, and especially after we may have accumulated our portion. Taxes levied and paid for this altruistic purpose could in no other way be more wisely spent.

Education is power. The man who works with his mind usually controls the man who works with his hands. Knowledge is one of the keys to power in both the scientific and economic world.

The acquisition of power is a most worthy aim. The prostitution of power to a selfish end is a monstrous crime. It is not the power we possess, but the use of the power which determines the value of one's life to the community.

When power is used for the backward trend of the social order it means disintegration and anarchy. When it is used for the forward trend it means stability and progress.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

ORIGIN OF THE CAB

IT HAS been said that the taxicab, once indulged in as a luxurious form of conveyance, has come now to be regarded by almost all classes as quite the proper way to get from one place to another. And it is a fact that the taxi has become so common that one can hardly conceive of a time when there was no such accommodation. That time, however, was not very long ago and in tracing back for the origin of the public cab we find an interesting circumstance.

The taxi, of course, is simply the motor applied to the horse-drawn cab, whose original name and that by which it is still known all over Europe is the "Fiacre." And here we find the strange and colorful circumstance of a public cab named after a saint—the French martyr, St. Fiacre! It came about in this way:

St. Fiacre was the patron saint of gardeners and the owner of a hotel in the Rue Saint-Martin in Paris which had a statue of the saint over the door called his place the "Hotel de Saint Fiacre." An enterprising fellow, this hotel keeper was the first to introduce, in the year 1640, public vehicles which his guests could hire on leaving his hostelry. Obtainable nowhere else, the cabs came to be called "Fiacre's" and the name has survived to this day. Its modern improvement, the "taxi," is so-called from the taxi meter which records the charges for the distance run.

WHICH PLACE IS BEST?

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'VE seen this land
From coast to coast,
For I've been ev'rywhere
Almost;
And some folks ask
Me which is best;
The North or South
Or East or West?

The North has grain,
The South has flow'rs,
And East and West
Their sunlit hours;
But this I find,
The more I roam,
That ev'ry place
Is someone's home.

The South has flow'rs,
The North has snow,
But someone loves
The Eskimo.
The West has hills,
The East has farms,
But maids have lips
And men have arms.

So, North or South
Or East or West,
It's plain to see
Which place is best.
It's where men love
And where maids care,
And you will find
That's ev'rywhere!

FOODS FOR ANY DAY

THE following are a few every day good things which may be prepared with little expense:

Yorkshire Pudding.

Take one cupful of sweet milk, one cupful of flour, two eggs, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix the salt and flour, add the milk gradually to form a paste; then add eggs beaten, separating yolks and whites. Cover the pan of batter—or if baked in gem pans—with the fat from the roasting pan. Serve with roast beef. Bake in a hot oven.

Jelly Dessert.

Take one glass of jelly, the white of an egg and one-half cupful of heavy cream. Put the jelly and the unbeaten white of egg in a bowl, beat until stiff. Serve in sherbet glasses topped with sweetened and flavored whipped cream.

Cheese Custard Supper Dish.

Spread as many slices of bread as there are members of the family, cover in a deep dish with a custard, using two eggs to a pint of milk, with a pinch of salt. Pour over the buttered bread after sprinkling it generously with finely-cut or grated cheese. Bake until puffy and the custard firm. Serve at once as it is much like an omelet—it falls after a few minutes in the air.

Corn Bread.

Take one cupful each of sour cream, brown sugar, flour and corn meal, one teaspoonful of soda, two well beaten eggs and a little salt. Bake in a hot oven.

Potato Salad.

The secret of a good potato salad is in the seasoning. Potatoes should be cut into small cubes and marinated with a thin dressing or with a French dressing for several hours before serving. It is hard for seasoning to enter into a cooked potato. With the addition of finely-cubed cucumber, a small onion finely minced added to potatoes that have been cooked in their jackets, cooled and skinned and diced, with a good salad dressing there is no reason for a poor salad.

A little finely-cut celery always improves a potato salad as does the adding of a hard cooked egg or two.

Lemon jelly with pineapple, a little celery and salad dressing, makes a salad which is especially refreshing.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE FLOWERS

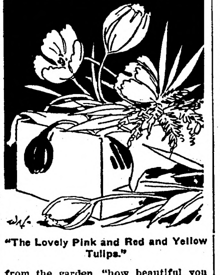
THE flowers from the garden had been sent in a box to the city. Some one in the city who was very fond of this particular garden had received the box.

And after one box had come, many others followed along, for the first box was sent when the first flowers came out in the spring, and they followed one right after the other after that.

And oh, how the flowers from the garden did enjoy their reception when they arrived.

They were greeted so delightfully.

"You dear pale lavender tulips," the lady said as she received the flowers from the garden, "how beautiful you are. You are just the color of orchids.



"The Lovely Pink and Red and Yellow Tulips."

"And here are the lovely pink and red and yellow tulips—and here is an orange-colored one!

"Here are the dear white lilacs and their pretty soft green leaves and dear me, dear me, how even the very twigs smell so sweetly of the garden."

And then the lady saw some ferns in the bottom of the box and as she saw that the ferns were so new that they had scarcely uncurled themselves, she almost cried.

"Why ferns," she said, "I grew you when I was a little girl. And your sweet fern fragrance is so like that dark cool corner of the garden where I put you that it almost makes me cry. Happiness often makes one want to cry, ferns," she said.

And the ferns thought it was lovely of her to weep a tear or two or three, as she did, and, too, she was homesick then, just a little, for that garden spot where it was so cool and where she had planted the ferns.

The ferns loved her tears because they thought there was nothing nicer than tears of affection. The rain was happy and the rain wept and when the rain wept the ferns were so happy for they loved tears of happiness!

Tears of happiness from the Rain King made them grow and kept them fresh and green.

Of course the plants in the house said they weren't thought so much of now as during the winter time when there were no flowers at all.

But still they couldn't complain, for on all the windy days they were still put out of the window and could drink the lovely refreshing rain water.

And Creeping Charlie grew more and more all the time, for he was so anxious to have a look at everything that he spread himself this way and that way.

The garden flowers were very much pleased, for when they first arrived they were afraid it was going to be too hot for them in the city home where there seemed to be so much heat.

But the garden flowers noticed the windows were quickly opened after they arrived and that the heat was turned off, which was surely an honor to the garden flowers.

It let them know how much they were thought of by the lady who received them.

"Oh garden flowers," she said to them, "how well I remember the garden parade of flowers, beginning in the spring and lasting all through the summer into the fall.

"And how we used to cover up the flowers in the fall with newspapers, and so the newspapers would not blow away, we fastened them down at the corners with pebbles from the garden gravel path.

"Yes, the pebbles even used to work for the garden.

"We all loved the garden, and we always will love the garden.

"And even if I cannot see the garden now all the time, I can see it once in awhile, and the flowers will be sent to me when I can't go to them.

"You travel so beautifully, dear flowers, too, you keep so fresh, and yet your journey is a long one."

And the flowers whispered in their sweet flower way:

"We would not fade for anything, for the one who sends us loves us, and the one who receives us loves us, and we want her to see us as we are!"

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

FINDING THE COWS

ALMOST any farmer's boy knows that if he is out looking for the cows, and he comes to an ant-hill, and cries out three times, "Doodle! doodle! doodle!" the ants will scamper away and the direction in which they run will show the direction in which the cows have strayed. The cry of "doodle" is uttered to scare the ants and set them running; for the doodle-bug is the ants' enemy. So much so that one name for him is the "ant-lion." The doodle-bug digs holes and lays ambushes to catch the ant; the ant is his favorite food. The ant is supposed to know this and, therefore, to be filled with terror at the name of its enemy—a terror which sets it running.

That the ant should understand human speech and recognize the name of its dreaded enemy is perfectly in accord with the ideas of our primitive ancestors who appear to have conceived man and the other members of the animal kingdom as being able, under certain conditions, of talking together in quite a chatty manner. But while the ability of man to understand and speak the language of birds and beasts was regarded as a special gift, conferred by some magical process as a rule, the power of beast and bird to understand the speech of man appears to have been taken for granted, something as of course.

When primitive man cried "Shoo!" to a hen the hen ran away. Of course she understood! But to understand what the hen said when she cackled was a more difficult matter requiring the aid of magic. So, of course, the ants understand when you cry "Doodle!" That ants run in the direction of the cows is an idea which has its origin in that deification of the bovine species which was so common among the Aryan races. The scared ants are seeking the protection of the gods. All unknown to himself the farmer boy who cried "Doodle!" to find the strayed cows stepping back through long ages to man's primal estate.

AS YOU sit before the loom of Life, guiding the swiftly moving shuttles as they dart to and fro, what sort of material are you weaving?

Peoples of every country on the globe are doing each hour what you are doing, weaving, weaving, weaving, fashioning textures which they must wear through eternity!

Some of the weavers are indifferent in their work, missing threads now and then, thinking that the imperfections will not be noticed by the Great Inspector, who, perhaps tomorrow may examine their handiwork and call them to account.

Oh, what a bungling mess these lackadaisical, listless weavers are producing with thousands of silken filaments misplaced, tangled warp and woof awry, blotches here and there, and the whole fabric lacking shapeliness, beauty and finish.

Every string shows neglect; every cord is knotted and askew, disfiguring and spoiling the fabric for any worthy use.

The clerk, the bookkeeper, the typist, the mechanic and all workers in the busy mills of human endeavor are wreathing and interlacing gossamery texture or course stuffs for their own garments, in which they must appear before the eyes of others.

What is the character of your garment?

Does it glint and shine in the azure light and delight the hearts of those who love you, or does it bear the slovenly imprint of ugliness and give offense?

Does its tawdry appearance debar you from participating in the grand affairs of life, or is it so exquisitely, perfectly and beautifully woven that you can stand before kings and win from them sincere admiration and commendation?

What sort of garment, my lad, are you weaving to wear when your hair begins to gray at the temples, wrinkles furrow your brow, and your youthful punctilia is gone?

And you, my dainty maid, with suspicious roses on your cheeks, glistening finger nails and bobbed tresses, what type of material are you weaving to cover your shoulders when they are drawn in by the frost of age and your eyes are marked with crows' feet?

Life's shuttles run eternally. In the little span of time that is yours to sit at the loom, make sure to guide the threads aright, and weave them in the hall-mark of a heroic life.

Lucky Thirteen Make Fortunes

Violate Superstition and Win Great Wealth in Oil Field.

Sweetgrass, Mont.—Since the Sunburst-Kevin oil field in Montana, which now has been proven to extend over the Canadian border into Alberta, has become world famed as a producer of oil and riches, a story book of romance could be written about the field.

But the company of 13 who violated every law of superstition, which should have doomed them to failure, have become the winners of vast fortunes.

The original Kalispell-Kevin Oil company had 13 members. Assuming that their company was to tear down tradition and become one of the world's most startling financial successes, they arranged to form their company of 13 members on Friday the 13th, and forthwith rented a post-office box No. 13 to carry out the number 13 as far as possible.

The Organizers.

The founders of the company were mostly entirely unfamiliar with the oil business, which they formed in 1921. Gov. J. E. Erickson of Helena, Mont.; C. L. Emmons, George F. Stannard, James K. Lang, J. M. Carlson, F. O. Williams, Miss Alsea Gray, Dr. D. F. Vosburgh, Theodore Torbenson, Lee Kerr, and Dr. J. C. Boyd, all of Kalispell, Mont.; A. J. Lowery of Polson, Mont., and Ralph Arnold, a famous geologist of Los Angeles, composed the group. Each member of the 13 original investors bought $500 worth of units, at $2.50 per unit, thus each received 200 units. Since that time the units have increased in valuation until they are worth $1,500 or more on the open market today, or $300,000 for an original investment of $500.

The company has over 100 producing oil wells and several good gas wells, and has room on its acreage for about 300 more oil wells.

Shortly after the company was formed some of the members of the firm bought used cars and gave units in exchange for them in order to have means of conveyance about their scattered acreage in the oil field.

Figuring the present approximate valuation of $1,500 per unit, exchanged for the cars, makes them the highest priced cars in the world's history for common cars.

C. L. Emmons, probably owned the highest priced Ford car in existence during the early days of the Kalispell-Kevin company. Being president of the new company, Mr. Emmons felt that he needed some sort of car to get around, and spent considerable time in looking about for some one with a proclivity to take a chance on the oil stock who would turn over his car for units. Finally a man was found who would turn over his car and accept 10 units and take a chance, as he said, a "thousand-to-one chance." It was a Ford and today the valuation of the units traded for it are worth $15,000.

Trade Units for Cars.

Others of the company managed to dicker away some of their units for other makes of cars. Lee Kerr traded 20 units for a Buick, which are worth $30,000 today, while A. R. Johnson traded 10 of his units for a car of the same make.

Governor Erickson came in for a high-priced car also. He bought a Willys-Knight, and the units of oil stock he paid for it were later valued at $16,500.

Although each of the 13 original members of the Kalispel-Kevin company have retained the majority of their stock and their dividends run into princely sums, the ones who traded units for cars originally believed that they had made great deals and that they had received more than the units were really worth then.

The Kalispell-Kevin company founders later were styled in the field as "The Lucky Thirteen" and have prospered from the first. Their first dividend was rather spectacular, being 5 per cent monthly, and continued until 1925, when it was increased to a 10 per cent monthly dividend, and after the pipe line service was enlarged to care for the company's oil the dividends were changed to 20 per cent monthly. To date a vast fortune has been paid in dividends, with the prospects of it continuing for years to come for the lucky 13 unit holders who own some of the most expensive but battered relics in the history of the automobile.

Swat the Fly and Halt His Breeding

Washington.—Spring is a season of relaxation and rejuvenation but it brings its peculiar responsibilities. One of them is the house fly.

The two most important ailments transmitted by flies are typhoid fever and the diarrheal diseases of children. These and other diseases may be transmitted in two ways, by mechanical transference and by inoculation. Flies which inject germs into the victim by biting, however, are relatively unimportant, since the blood sucking varieties are not so numerous in the United States as the house fly type.

The stiff, hairy parts of the house fly are particularly adapted to the mechanical transference of contagion. Contaminated with filth in places where conditions are especially favorable to the development of germs, it carries them to the food and drink consumed by man.

It has been suggested that the slogan, "Swat the Fly," be amended to read, "Fight the fly by destroying its breeding places and screening it out of the house."

Boston Traffic Jams Cost $26,000,000 Year

Boston, Mass.—A traffic survey has revealed that congestion in the business district of Boston costs people in the metropolitan area more than $20,000,000 a year.

Observation of the incoming flow of traffic revealed that 817,000 persons, on the average, enter the downtown business section every day. It was found that each person loses at least ten minutes because of traffic congestion. Placing a value of 1 cent on each of the 8,170,000 minutes thus lost daily, the experts arrived at a money loss of $24,510,000 in a year of 300 business days.

Since 1922 "Rags" has not missed a fire call answered by Truck Company No. 30 in Chicago. He is a mixture of several breeds, and during the time he has been a "fireman" he has learned the meaning of the fire bells and is one of the most alert "members" of the department.

CANNON TAKEN IN CIVIL WAR RETURNED TO SOUTHERNERS

Gun at Gettysburg Goes Back to Marietta, Ga., With Consent of War Department.

Marietta, Ga.—This little city, situated a few miles from Atlanta and at the foot of Kennesaw mountain, which saw such active fighting between the troops of the North and South during the war between the states, recently sent a delegation to Gettysburg, Pa., and recaptured a small brass cannon that formerly belonged to a state college here. It fell into the hands of the Northern troops near Augusta late in 1864.

But this was a peaceful invasion of Pennsylvania, the authorities of the government reservation having agreed to surrender the gun if the Georgians came after it.

The visit of the Marietta delegation followed considerable correspondence between Len C. Baldwin, mayor pro tem. of Marietta, and E. E. Davis, superintendent of the Gettysburg National Military park.

Several weeks ago the superintendent identified the gun by the inscriptions upon it. The cannon is one of four which orginally belonged to the Georgia Military institute, a thriving before-the-war college at this point. The authorities here expressed a desire to have the gun returned and the superintendent, with the consent of the War department, invited them to come and get it.

Following the exercises at Gettysburg the cannon was shipped to Marietta, where it was formally accepted by the United Daughters of the Confederacy and other Confederate organizations at exercises held on April 26, Confederate Memorial day, a date that marks the final surrender of Johnson's army.

The Georgia Military institute was established in 1851 as a private school. The state took it over in 1852, and by the time the war between the states began it had something like 100 pupils. Among its possessions were four cannon. Two companies were formed from the students attending, and these with the four cannon marched away to war. The boys fought valiantly, but all the cannon were captured. All of these guns have been returned. One is in the local Confederate cemetery and two of them guard the entrance to the state capitol in Atlanta. The one which has just been received was captured by Sherman in an engagement near Augusta.

Man Fights for Life in War With Insects

America, more than any other part of the world, is engaged in a war for its existence against insects, the natural enemy of man, and their menace is greater than ever before, declared Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the bureau of entymology, in a startling interview with the American Magazine.

America is especially threatened by insects, continued Doctor Howard, because of its varied climatic conditions and large areas of vegetation planted contiguously and affording the best possible feeding grounds for parasites.

"Any farmer, or anyone who has a little garden in the suburbs and a few fruit trees has come to know that he cannot get a perfect or even near perfect crop without protective mechanical or chemical measures against insects," added the entymologist. "When one buys fruit, vegetables or cereal product, an indirect toll is paid upon the insect hordes, which want exactly what human beings want and are trying to crowd us off the earth to feed their fabulously increasing families.

"Some idea of the extent of the cost of insects is shown from the fact that $30,000,000 worth of wire screening is sold annually. Orchard growers of California alone spend $45,000,000 annually fighting insects. The bureau of entymology spends about $3,000,000 a year in field work and scientific investigations to determine what strategy to use against the enemies, but this sum does not include special sums to meet emergencies. The total actual cost of the insect warfare is conservatively $60,000,000 a year.

"To put it more clearly, the damage wrought by insects every year in the United States nullifies the labor of 1,000,000 men. These material figures do not even touch upon the loss of life caused by the 65 kell-known types of disease-carrying insects, which is beyond estimate."

New Blackboard Idea Has Many Advantages

Experiments looking toward an improved visibility of blackboards in public schools have brought forth the translucent blackboard on whose surface writings are plainly visible from all parts of a room.

This effect is obtained by abandoning the usual opaque board and substituting therefor a ground glass surface uniformly illuminated from the rear. With the customary room illumination, part daylight and part electric, everything on this blackboard is visible from all parts of the room.

Incidental advantages gained are: ease of erasure, ability to use the surface as a translucent screen for projecting lantern slides with the possibility of adding chalk lines to projected diagrams; ability to intersperse chalk talks with lantern slides without changing the general room illumination.

Illuminated Clubs

To assist in directing traffic at night, Paris policemen are carrying lighted clubs, somewhat like the illuminated baton of an orchestra leader, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. They are equipped with a red and white bulb, both supplied with current from batteries attached to the policemen's belt. A switch exposes either of the lights desired.

"Lady Sylvia St. Croix? That is—I am—that is to say—may I present myself?—you are—who are you?"

She stared at him in what seemed undisguised astonishment and drew away her hand. But she stepped out of the crowd and stood aside with him on the dock.

"You have been sent to fetch me? You are, I suppose," she said, scanning his recherche attire, "my cousin's groom?"

The voice, the accent, were, to be sure, as utterly different from Meely's as were the tone and manner of the girl—a self-possessed, reserved manner that made St. Croix her abject slave—in spite of her unflattering and stupid mistake in taking him for a groom—heavens!

"I am your Cousin St. Croix, Lady Sylvia," he stammeringly explained.

"Oh!" with a surprised lift of her fine brows. "How do you do?" She offered her gloved hand and as he took it it flashed upon him that he would know Meely Schwenckton's hands among a thousand—he would know the very touch of them—he had always thought her hands so unusual for a working girl. When this girl drew off her gloves— But how utterly absurd!—though the resemblance was truly amazing—

An experienced traveler, St. Croix knew how to expedite the tedious customs business and in a very short time he was helping Lady Sylvia into a taxicab.

Seated at her side in the cab, listening with strained attention to the tones of her voice, stealing glances at her exquisite profile, noting the movements of her gloved hands (if only she'd take off her gloves), St. Croix felt every minute more bewildered, more uncertain. There was something in the very atmosphere of her presence that made him feel as if he were sitting beside Meely—yet the incongruity of identifying in any way this elegant creature with Meely Schwenckton—her civilized speech with Meely's Pennsylvania Dutch dialect, her grace with Meely's vulgar clumsiness, her sparkling countenance with Meely's heavy dullness, the simplicity of her coiffure with Meely's elaborate pompadour—

The wild absurdity of his predicament in not being sure made him feel, as he told himself, "woozy!"

All at once he recalled that Meely had a tiny brown mole under the lobe of her ear—he had kissed it often. Her hands and that mole! If he could only lift the lobes of Lady Sylvia's ears and have a look! But suppose he found the mole there—what would it mean and what would he do about it? Surely this was the weirdest experience that had ever fallen to the lot of a man!

"You have changed so much since you were a child, Cousin Sylvia! I'd never have recognized you." He put out a feeler.

"No, of course you wouldn't. When you last saw me, I was a homely little tow-headed, bow-legged, pigeon-toed, freckle-faced kid!"

The words had a vaguely familiar sound to St. Croix. He seemed to hear again the unaccountable indignation with which Meely Schwenckton, that day in the woods on the hill, had repeated, "Bow-legged!" His head swam and he felt almost ill.

Suddenly he turned in his seat and looked straight into her eyes with a very definite and frank suspicion. "This," he inquired with what he felt to be subtle cunning, his eyes probing hers like gimlets, "was of course your first crossing?"

"Well, I've crossed the Channel so often that crossing the Atlantic didn't seem anything! Why, I'd hardly know I was on a boat at all, crossing the Atlantic. Why, crossing the Atlantic—"

She was evading a direct answer to his question!—and covering the fact by volubly chattering.

Seated opposite each other, presently, in the dining car, he waited in strained suspense for the critical moment when their waiter would bring their order and Lady Sylvia would be obliged to remove her gloves; and at the same time he was wondering how he could contrive to have a look behind her ears for that tiny mole; for that mole could have been no part of a make-up; he knew it too intimately not to be quite sure that it didn't come off!

"So," she suddenly remarked, resting her folded arms on the table and bending forward confidentially, "your brother, Marvin, won't have me, will he?"

St. Croix made an effort to conceal his surprise and embarrassment at this unexpected broadside. He felt it lacked delicacy.

"I'm afraid when he sees you, he'll change his mind!"

"'Afraid'?"

"I needn't tell you why—you know!"

"Tell me," she smilingly invited, "what's he like?"

"A queer bird! Seems to hate his comforts! Wants to live like a hod-carrier or a street-cleaner or a— Why, he's gone and taken a teaching job, if you'll believe me, for a petty little salary that wouldn't keep me in gasoline! Insists on living simply and working for his living."

The waiter's arrival with their food brought him up short.

As Lady Sylvia drew off her gloves, he fairly held his breath. But to his chagrin, that test proved no more conclusive than anything else about her, for her hands were now, to his distaste, so covered with rings and so perfectly manicured (Meely's nails had never been so pink and polished) that while these lovely hands certainly did somewhat resemble Meely's, he felt, as about everything else concerning his cousin, that he could not feel sure.

"I wear all these rings," she explained apologetically, "when I travel because I think it's the safest way to carry them."

Well, since the hand-test failed, he was all the more determined to find that mole!—if it were there to be found.

A very vague attention he gave to his dinner, as, with every least movement of her head, he tried to see under and around and through her ear-lobes!

"Lady Sylvia," he said abruptly, with a sudden reckless daring, "I want to take you to see an acquaintance of mine who looks so remarkably like you that it's uncanny!"

"Lady Sylvia St. Croix? That Is—I Am—That Is to Say—May I Present Myself?—You Are—Who Are You?"

"You mean, don't you, that you'll bring her to see me?"

"No. Couldn't. She's a farmer's daughter living about five miles from us. An ignorant, vulgar—"

He stopped short, his face flushing red, feeling, insanely, as though he were insulting Meely Schwenckton to her face! "A very nice country girl," he hastily amended his remark, "but not a person one would ask to call on you!"

"But why?"

"Oh, not in our class."

"Then you have 'classes' in America?"

"You know we do! Ever hear of our Colonial Dames or D. A. R.'s?"

"I've heard of your G. A. R.'s to my sorrow! But these C. D.'s and D. A. R.'s—they seem to be an expression of the national yearning for a titled order; for all those silly social encumbrances which England, so much more advanced in democracy, is trying to slough off. So this farmer's daughter is an ignorant, vulgar girl who is 'uncannily' like me? Thanks!"

"I'll take you to see for yourself how much you look alike. I want to see you two together! Why, you're as alike as twins—except that you are wholly unlike—I mean your features are alike; that's all."

"It will be interesting to see her—like seeing oneself on the screen! I'll know, for once, what I do look like. A portrait painter once told me my type was unusual—"

She chattered on, but he scarcely heard her, so intent he was in trying to penetrate the veil of her ear-lobes—when suddenly she stopped short, laid down her knife and fork and looked at him in puzzled astonishment.

"Why," she inquired breathlessly, her brows puckered in bewilderment, "are you looking at me so strangely?"

"I'll tell you," he smiled frankly. "You look so like that farm girl that the very shape of your ears is like hers!—so that I should not be at all surprised to find you had even the same little brown mole under the lobe of your ear that she has!"

"Well!" she exclaimed, "how extraordinarily intimate you must have been with her to have learned all about her little brown mole under her ear-lobe! This is interesting, not to say exciting! Own up—how did you come to know about this mole?"

"Do you have one, too?"

"What 'satiable curiosity'! See for yourself." She lifted the lobes of her ears—and he looked.

There was no mole there.

But his relief was not greater than his astonishment and confusion that two people could look so alike without being related. However, he could delight in her, now, without fear and dread—and be proud of her distinction and even enjoy this weird resemblance to the girl for whom his senses hungered.

"Now appease my 'satiable curiosity'!" she insisted. "How—did—you—discover—that farm girl's little mole?"

"Well, you'll find it in your heart to forgive me, I know, that her beauty, so very much like yours, proved so irresistible that—sometimes—I kissed her when I got a good chance."

"And it was while engaged in kissing her that you discovered the little mole?"

"You see if she hadn't been beautiful, like you, I shouldn't have wanted to kiss her—being a bit fastidious in my taste."

"Your fastidious taste," said Lady Sylvia reflectively, "didn't find her too vulgar to be kissed, though she's too vulgar to be asked to call on me?" She shook her head hopelessly. "It's too much for my logic. I don't get it. Kissing doesn't seem to me less intimate than calling! But one thing I do get—I am to play the role of the rival of this 'ignorant, vulgar farm girl' in your affections! It isn't a role that appeals to me."

"I'll show her to you and you'll understand!"

"But how will she like that—your bringing me to inspect her? She might not like it at all! I shouldn't think she'd like it! She might fall upon me and scratch me!"

"But, my dear cousin, you don't suppose that a girl of that class takes the caresses of men of our class seriously?"

"You're sure that girl didn't take you seriously?"

"She wouldn't presume to!" he answered, a faint tinge of uneasiness in his voice.

"I've never been able to understand," she said almost plaintively, "how it is that while men of the most civilized background will seek the most intimate relations with low girls, it would be worse than death to women of the same background to be so much as touched by a common, coarse man. Why is that, St. Croix?"

St. Croix looked rather shocked, as though he felt her choice of a theme to be in very poor taste, to say the least.

"Well, you know," he answered lightly, "when the gods made man and woman they used a great deal less clay and much more divine fire for the woman than for the man; so that woman is of course less earthly, finer, more celestial! Will you," he asked as they now rose to leave the diner, "come to the smoking corridor for a cigarette?"

She thought she would not; but when he had taken her back to their chairs, she urged him to go for a smoke without her. That he refused to do; he had no desire to tear himself from the delectable sight of her for even the few minutes it took to smoke a cigarette. But when she insisted that he must go so that she could take a little nap, as she was "awfully sleepy," he reluctantly yielded.

His reflections as he smoked were increasingly reassuring. The agitating sense of the girl's dual personality was somewhat dulled by the soothing effect of several cigarettes. Even the recollection of certain vague doubts he had always felt about Meely, certain inexplicable things like her fine hands, her being able to get away so often from the hard work of the farm, the touch of foreignness in her speech, her very stupidities that sometimes had seemed more like keen thrusts at him—none of these things were convincing enough to counteract the evidence of the mole. Meely had a mole and Lady Sylvia had none.

He had to go through several day coaches to reach his parlor car, and it was when he was hurrying down the aisle of the last of these, scarcely seeing anyone as he progressed, for the backs of the passengers were toward him, that suddenly the back of a head just a few feet ahead of them brought him to a petrified standstill—froze his very blood—and made his heart sink like lead; for there, under his very eyes, so close that he could have put out his hand and touched her, sat Meely Schwenckton—her heavy, fair hair arranged in the vulgarly exaggerated pompadour she always affected; wearing a grotesque flowered blouse that looked like a kimono or a dressing-sack tucked into her skirt (which no doubt it was!) no rings on her hands; sitting in the slovenly, slouching way that had so often offended his sense of "decency."

The seat behind her was empty. Noiselessly he slipped into it. Her head was bowed over a copy of Snappy Stories; curly tendrils of hair on her white neck—

The mole! Was it there? A mad hope seized him that even yet he might find Lady Sylvia and Meely to be two different people. He bent his head and looked. And there, under her left ear, was the little brown mole!

Had Odd Accomplishment

Earl Russell has this anecdote in his book, "My Life and Reminiscences":

"My grandmother, Lady John Russell, was a great favorite with Queen Victoria throughout her life. Not alone, of course, because she had the peculiar and unusual capacity of wagging her ears like a dog. But this accomplishment intrigued the queen and she suddenly called on Lady John to show it off to an ambassador. My grandmother was so taken back that she lost for a long time the power to move either ear, and only utimately regained her power to move one, which she occasionally did for my edification."

When Something Happened

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

She was such a nice girl and yet somehow nothing ever seemed to happen to Sally. Mary—her older sister—could hardly stick her nose out of the door without having some sort of adventure that was exciting. When Sally went motoring she didn't even have tire trouble. Driving home alone one evening Mary had encountered hold-up men. Dear knows what would have happened but for the timely arrival of a traffic policeman. More thrills, more adventure. And it was Mary's school, not Sally's, that had been burned down so that there were no classes for two weeks. Even her younger sister Maud had more adventures than she did. It was Maud who had been bitten by the mad dog—at least the dog they thought was mad—Maud who found the diamond bar pin and had had the distinction of refusing a reward for returning it to its owner.

Then one day when Sally was twenty-one something did happen—in fact, several things happened—and they happened so unexpectedly and in such rapid succession that at the end of twelve hours of adventure Sally began to wonder whether she was really Sally after all and not possibly Maud or Mary.

For lack of anything to do she had driven to the railroad station, thinking that she would save her sister Mary the trouble of taking a taxi if by chance she happened to return home from a shopping trip in the city by the five-o'clock train. Before the commuter's train drew in, a through express came thundering up the tracks and, gracefully slowing down, drew to a stop. A hatless young man swung from one of the pullman cars and went into the ticket office. Sally noticed him and reflected as she did so that he wore an exceedingly good-looking suit and wore it well. Then the engine gave a few well-bred little puffs and deftly drew the long train out of the station. The hatless, good-looking young man dashed from the ticket office, regarded the train then well under way and muttered something apparently not entirely fit to print.

Then he turned abruptly and walked over to the side of the platform where Sally was parked. The last taxi had just departed. Sally smiled a little from her seat by the wheel of her smart little roadster.

"Pardon me," he said, with an involuntary gesture for the hat that wasn't on his head. "Do you know where I can hire a car and a driver? No taxis about, and I'm in a hurry. My train—that's it that just went out. If I could get some one to drive fast I might catch up with it at the next stop. There is a fifteen minutes' wait there for a Western connection. Is there a garage about?"

Sally opened the door of her car and with a gesture asked the young man to get in beside her.

"If you don't mind fast driving we can make it," she said. "It's forty miles on the highway to go. When is the train due to draw out? Lucky you haven't a hat—you'd have to hold on to it. How did you happen to get off?"

"I had to send a telegram—the porter said I'd have time. All my bags are on the train—and a case of rather rare old etchings I'd just bought at auction for my mother. Don't like to leave them unguarded too long—and it will mean a whole lot if I can catch up with that train."

Sally knew about etchings, too. She had only one or two of any value but she appreciated them, and as they sped along they talked of their hobby. Sally assured her companion that it didn't make a bit of difference about her being late. She could telephone from the big station before anyone at home had time to worry over her.

"We've got ten minutes to spare," Gifford Morgan told her as they drew into the big concourse. "Lock your car there in the parking place and hurry in—I want to show you those etchings. In fact, there is one of them—I insist on giving to you—as a token of my appreciation. Though, of course, I'm coming back to see you if you'll let me."

Long past six that night Maud and Mary began to worry about Sally. At seven a telegram came from a city a hundred miles away. "Got on train by mistake. Perfectly safe and with friends. Will be home tomorrow."

Lingering in the pullman car with Gifford over his etchings—she had lingered a moment or two too long. It was at the next stop that the telegram was sent. But Sally had remained on the train and had gone with Gifford to his mother's charming house to explain to her with many laughs and blushes the whole exciting adventure.

"And now," said Gifford's mother, "the only sensible thing for you two foolish children to do is to go back to look up the car that you left parked at the station. Then Gifford must drive you home again. After all, we have the precious etchings."

They were on the last lap of their journey driving in Sally's car when Gifford realized that the auspicious time had arrived to propose.

Sally almost ran the car into a ditch when Gifford told her he loved her. And Gifford took that gesture as assurance that his suit would be successful.

Article Thirty-Four.

Weakness Take-Out

The weakness take-out of a partner's unopposed no trump is objected to by some on the ground that they are increasing the contract without offering any help.

This take-out should be made with six cards of a minor suit and a trickless hand because you are offering considerable help. While you would have no help for a no trump your six-card suit should be worth two or three tricks. Below is a hand which illustrates it. Played at no trump the declarer would be defeated two tricks, while played at diamonds four odd tricks are made.

	N
	♠—A, Q, 7 ♡—Q, 7, 4, 3 ◇—A, Q, 7 ♣—Q, 5, 2
W ♠—K, 8, 6, 5 ♡—A, J, 5 ◇—K, 2 ♣—9, 7, 4, 3		E ♠—10, 9, 4 ♡—K, 8, 2 ◇—9, 8 ♣—A, K, J, 8, 6
	S ♠—J, 3, 2 ♡—10, 9, 6 ◇—J, 10, 6, 5, 4, 3 ♣—10

North deals and bids one no trump, as he has all four suits protected, six probable tricks, and three quick tricks. East passes, South bids two diamonds, and all pass.

West has no lead which is good, but his small club is the least undesirable; so he opens with that. Declarer sees that he must lose one club and two hearts. If his finesses win he can take all of the others. He plays the hand as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	C3	C2	CJ	C10
2	HA	H3	H2	H6
3	H5	H4	HK	H9
4	HJ	HQ	H8	H10
5	C4	C5	CK	D3
6	DK	DA	D8	DJ
7	D2	DQ	D9	D4
8	C7	H7	C6	S2
9	C9	CQ	CA	D5
10	SK	SA	S4	SJ
11	S5	SQ	S9	S3
12	S6	D7	C8	D10
13	S8	S7	S10	D6

Declarer wins four odd tricks.

East's heart lead at trick 2 is up to dummy's greatest weakness, and at trick 4 he continues the suit hoping that his partner may trump it. At trick 10 it makes no difference whether or not West plays the King of spades. He sees that declarer needs only two tricks in spades which he can get either way.

The following hand illustrates the denial bid and a rebid over the denial:

	N
	♠—A, Q, 9 ♡—5, 2 ◇—9, 7, 5, 2 ♣—K, J, 6, 4
W ♠—8, 7, 3 ♡—10 ◇—K, J, 10, 8, 6 ♣—10, 9, 8, 3		E ♠—K, J, 10, 6, 4 ♡—K, 8, 4 ◇—A, Q ♣—7, 5, 2
	S ♠—5, 2 ♡—A, Q, J, 9, 7, 6, 3 ◇—4, 3 ♣—A, Q

East deals and bids one spade, South bids two hearts and West passes. North, having but two small cards of his partner's suit, bids two no trump as a denial of hearts. East passes and South, having a very long and strong heart suit and three doubletons which are very unfavorable for a no trump, bids three hearts, which ends the bidding.

West leads the eight of spades, the highest of his partner's suit, and dummy is spread. After studying a moment declarer plays as follows:

	W	N	E	S
1	S8	SA	S4	S2
2	H10	H5	H4	HJ
3	C3	C4	C2	CA
4	C8	CK	C5	CQ
5	C9	CJ	C7	D3
6	S3	H2	H8	HQ
7	D6	D2	HK	HA
8	D8	D5	S6	H9
9	D10	D7	S10	H7
10	S7	D9	SJ	H6
11	C10	C6	DQ	H3
12	DK	S9	DA	D4
13	DJ	SQ	SK	S5

Declarer wins five odd tricks.

The bidding needs very little further comment. A denial bid should be made when holding less than normal expectancy (three small ones or two if one is as high as the Queen) and three or four probable tricks in the hand. With a five-card major suit it should be bid; lacking that a no trump is best if holding stoppers in the other three suits or two stoppers in each of two of the other suits. South in turn must deny his partner's no trump because of his strong hearts and his distribution 7-2-2-2 which makes no trump very undesirable.

In the play declarer might finesse in spades on the first trick, but by not doing so he hopes to be able to discard the remaining spade from his own hand. At trick 4 he must put the lead in dummy and can do so only by overtaking his Queen of clubs. At trick 5 he leads the Jack of clubs in order to get rid of a losing diamond from his own hand. After that he can only take his trumps and give up the last two tricks.

Paris' One Oak Tree

Only one oak tree grows in Paris, which contains more than 100,000 trees, according to an official report. The Sixteenth arrondissement is the richest in trees, and includes more than 10,000, owing to its numerous avenues. The great increase in the number of trees in Paris is due to Baron Houssmann, the famous prefect of the Seine, under Napoleon III, who pierced and planned most of the present avenues of Paris.

Depth of Fascism

"We have a branch in Genoa, Italy," remarked a Detroit exporter, "and while I was there recently I was given a demonstration of the depth and extent of Fascism. One morning our agent came down to the office and in a moment he looked worried. We had an engagement to make a trip, but he begged a postponement until he could go home, a distance of a full hour, and return. It developed that he had forgotten his Facisti insignia, which the faithful wear conspicuously. 'I must have it,' he said, 'else they might think I had changed my mind over night.'"

German Brides Work

Of the 71,000 brides in Germany during the last two years 54,000 had jobs or had learned a trade. Stenographers working in industrial and insurance offices were most attractive to the opposite sex, 19 per cent of the working girls who married coming from these two branches of business.

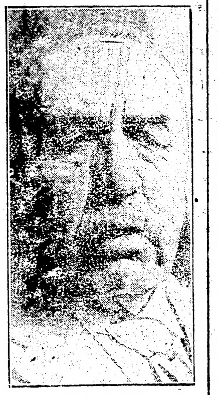
FORMER GOVERNOR VAN SANT FAVORS PROPOSED MERGER

Man Who Bitterly Fought and Defeated Merger Generation Ago Now Sees Benefit in the Consolidation of Northern Lines.

Ex-Governor Van Sant, who saw the development of transportation in the old steamboat days on the Mississippi to the present day, in recent interview expressed his unqualified approval of the proposed merger.



S. R. VAN SANT

This is the view of former Governor Samuel R. Van Sant of Minnesota, who more than twenty-five years ago brought about the defeat of the plan of James J. Hill, E. H. Harriman and James Pierpont Morgan to bring about the consolidation of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railways. He said, "There is not now the same reason for opposing the consolidation of railways that there was in 1901. Competition as a public safeguard has been replaced by highly efficient governmental regulation. In 1901 competition was the only protection the public had. There were no other railroads extending through to the coast in this great territory. The Milwaukee railway, the Union Pacific railway, the Canadian railroads and the Panama Canal are now direct competitors with the Northern lines in the Pacific Northwest. We did not have these in 1901. The Interstate Commerce Commission at that time had little power; in fact there was no efficient public regulation of railroads. A new governmental policy now prevails. It is recognized that under government supervision better service and lower rates can be obtained than under the former systems of ruinous competition.

"The fact seems to have been overlooked that when the governors and attorneys general of all the northwestern states met in 1901 at Helena, Montana, at my request, for the purpose of appealing to the government to oppose the merger, we petitioned Congress to provide the Interstate Commerce Commission with real regulatory powers. This has been done. The danger that might come from consolidated power of railroads has now been removed. The public are now in a position to enjoy the advantage of such a consolidation.

"Objection to consolidations that are based on wholly local considerations must be brushed aside in the general public interest."

"We live in an age of progress," said the Ex-Governor, "in an age of consolidation and co-operation. Our country is big; our business is big; our men are big; a large vision is required of the public. The consolidation of great railway systems are no longer to be feared; far from being a menace they are now essential."

MAKE A GOOD SHOCK

Good Shocking Protects Oats from The Weather.

THE main objects in shocking oats are to permit proper curing, and at the same time to protect the grain from weathering as much as possible. If the oats are green or weedy, and weather conditions are favorable, the bundles may be allowed to cure for a few hours or even a day in the carrier row before shocking. Two kinds of shocks may be built, round, or long shocks. If the grain is fully ripe and free from weeds the round shock usually is the most satisfactory. It stands up better in windy weather and protects the oats from weathering better than the long shock. If, however, the oats are green and the bundles contain weeds, and especially if the weather is rainy and unfavorable for harvesting, the long shock is preferable. It permits air to pass through the shock more freely. In most districts the long shock is left uncapped. Cap bundles when used should be broken and placed in such manner so that they will not blow off. Oats should never be shocked when damp with dew or rain, as the grain may mold. Skill and care in shocking will pay big dividends where the crop may be subjected to frequent storms and rains while curing in the field.

The usual names appear at the top of the list, yet, as I am typing these names, and amounts, I couldn't help but notice the names of some our younger boys, some of them newly weds, just getting started on their own hook, using the slang expression. When I made up this list and found such good scouts as Herman Peterson, Alf Movick, Hilmer Lunke, Frank Horien and Alfred Larson, every one of them having more than 200 pounds of butterfat I cannot help but feel that some of these regular names at the top of the list will be finding their own names, some day, further down on the report. It is significant in more than one way to see the young boys, most of them grew up here. take a hold like some of them are now doing. It means a great deal to the community as well as themselves and family. Continue the work and let us have more young boys follow your example.

Does Cooperation Pay? These men think so. Here is what some of them say. "The individual seller has about as much chance againts the organized buyer as a dog with wax legs has of catching an asbestos cat in hell" Oliver J. Sands, president of the American National Bank, Richmond, Va.

2 Cooperation is not a sentimet; it is an economic necessity. Chas. Steinmetz, Electrical wizard.

3 The Farmer has been advised to death. What he needs is not advice but co-operation. Carl Gray, president of the Union Pacific Railroad.

4 The most distinct and significant movement in American Agriculture in this decade is the almost universal trend toward cooperation in the marketing and distribution of farm products. W. M. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture.

5 The cooperative movement is the most important development of recent years and I propose actively and energetically to assist the farmers to promote their welfare through cooperative marketing. President Coolidge.

6 Business men should encourage cooperative marketing for producers for the same reason that they should support any method for the advancement of the business and economic life of the country because it is good business. Herbert Hoover.

7 Cooperative marketing is one of the most respectable business movements in the country to day and no one has to apologize for belonging to it. It has first class trade and credit standing, and so respectable an institution as the United States Government vouches for it. Walton Peteet.

Remember that your creamrey handles eggs as well as cream, and, pays cash for same. So help your neighbor and community in making it a bigger success by selling your eggs and cream to your own creamery.

A large number of our neighboring creameries do not take cream after dinner during the summer months. Others will take it but stop grading. Many of the patrons do not realize the importance of early deliveries during the summer months—so please keep this in mind and do your share to assist us in making butter that will score a Land O' Lakes by getting your cream to the creamery at the latest 1 p. m., at which time we will allow you whatever grade your cream may grade.

He drew a long, deep, quivering breath. Well, he would have an explanation of this mystery if he had to drag Meely by force into the parlor car to face either her empty chair or her living counterpart!

"Meely!"

She turned with a bound and at sight of him, her dull face expressed surprise and pleasure. "Well—of—all—things! Mr. Creighton yet! Well, me, I'm that took back, Mr. Creighton! What brang you to New York over? Come on," she said, making room for him beside her, "and set down here, side by each—ain't? My land's sakes!" she exclaimed as he obeyed her, "ain't you feelin' good, Mr. Creighton? You look that pale! Most like a dead one! What ails you, anyhow? Are you mebby car-sick? I got awful car-sick goin'. But comin', I'm feelin' right good. I was to New York over to look for a place. I'm a right good cooker and I heerd they paid good cooks in New York as much as five dollars a week. With room and board yet! So I says to Pop, I says—"

She stopped short, reached for a coat that was crushed between her and the window, slipped it on and stood up. "Come, St. Croix," she spoke naturally, "the game's up of course. Let's go back to our chairs—if you're not embarrassed to walk through this train with my pompadour! I thought this the quickest, easiest way to make you see how I do it! For I'm in the way of being a professional actress, St. Croix, and 'make-up' is my strongest point."

Her countenance was concerned and sympathetic as, sitting opposite him in the parlor car, she considered his white-faced suffering. Was she cruel, she wondered? But surely, this was "coming to him"—he deserved it! And yet he looked so ghastly! Perhaps he might kill himself and it would be her fault! Well, would that be as bad as what he had plotted to do to "Meely Schwenckton"? It would not!

"I'll tell you, St. Croix, all about it if you want to know," she suggested in a troubled voice, her face almost as pale as his own. "I'm sorry if I've hurt you terribly, but think how you were going to hurt me!"

"Not you!—the girl you pretended to be," he said huskily. "And such a girl would not have been hurt! A girl like you can't judge for one like Mee—of the Schwenckton breed!"

"Better than you can, St. Croix! You would have ruined her life for her!"

"Not if she'd been what she seemed!" he insisted, his voice low-pitched and hoarse.

"What she seemed was an ignorant, stupid, but perfectly decent girl! And after the pitiful note Mr. Schwenckton wrote you which you thought was about me! It was about his daughter Nettie, who he knew was in love with you. It was she that sent you that fudge."

"How the h—l you ever managed the devilish coup!" he exclaimed desperately.

"The queer thing, St. Croix, was that there wasn't a thing premeditated about it—it all just happened. I just fell into the thing step by step. I'll tell you. I'll begin with the mole. I knew that was a landmark for you! So I put flesh-colored court plaster over it and powered the spot with flesh-colored powder."

He stared at her helplessly.

"The big mistake you made, St. Croix, was in not knowing I was the teacher of William Penn school. Nettie Schwenckton wasn't. You had us mixed. I was the teacher; and I boarded at the Schwenckton farm."

"But—but," he stammered, "then Marvin helped you put this thing over on me!"

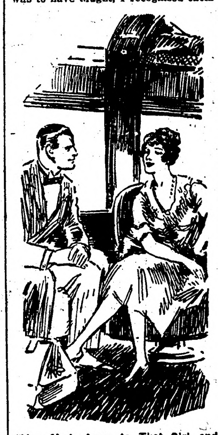
"Oh, dear, no! He had nothing to do with it!"

"Do you swear to me he didn't know who you were?" St. Croix demanded with jealous suspicion and resentment.

"Well, he certainly did suspect me for a fraud and a bluff when he heard me teach United States geography! But he didn't know anything more about me than you did. Now, I'll tell you ALL! I've always been mad to go on the stage or the screen. I managed to scrape together enough money to go to Paris to study dramatic art a few months. Then I got a small part in an English repertoire company that played in the provinces and I earned enough to buy my passage to America, the only place, I was told, where screen stars earned anything. It was an awful risk, my coming here, I had so little money. But I reassured my anxious parents by telling them that if I got stranded I'd send out an S O S to the Creighton family. Meantime, as Marvin has jilted me, Mother and Father decided there was no obligation upon us, now, to tell your family of my adventure and my ambition, until we saw how I succeeded on the screen, if at all!"

"But it has surely been understood all along, Sylvia, that I was eager to take Marvin's place—"

"There wasn't any place to take, St. Croix. Marvin may think, in his pride, that he jilted me—but the fact of the case is that I jilted him first. I never would hear of marrying either of you! But my poor parents needed your money so badly, they always hoped I'd change my mind, and so they never broke it to any of you that I'd backed out. Well, I came over to America in the utmost ignorance of everything I should have known; rather expecting to take Hollywood by storm!—feeling quite condescending in offering my talents (which I myself greatly admired) to the American managers; and not knowing that Hollywood was three thousand miles from New York. Fortunately, I learned a few needful facts on the way over. My deck chair happened to be next to a young American woman who had been a country teacher. She told me all about herself—how she had gone over in June with the student-teacher excursion and had met and fallen in love with a man on the ship, a young college professor. As soon as they'd landed at Plymouth, they'd gotten married, traveled all summer and were now on their way home. She told me the first thing she'd got to do when she got home was to send in her resignation to the country school she was to have taught if she had not met her fate and gotten married. When she mentioned the state, county and township where she was to have taught, I recognized them as the address of the Creightons. Next thing I was telling her my story; and when she learned how little money I had, she was appalled; and when she told me Hollywood was three thousand miles from New York and that it took five days and five hundred dollars to get there," I was panic-stricken. So we fixed up a plot. Her parents' home was in Reading, Pennsylvania, and her husband and she were going there until his college opened. She invited me to go home with them and she would give me her normal school diploma and lend me the use of her name, Amelia Schwenckton (now no longer her name), and I could go and appropriate her school for a few months, until I'd saved enough to go to Hollywood.



"You Made Love to That Girl and Would Have Despoiled and Ravished Her."

"She was really a young woman of quite a feverish imagination, I do assure you. Her Schwenckton relatives had never seen her (they're very distantly related) so I could pass myself off to them as their cousin. The thing appealed to me not only as a solution of my penniless predicament, but as a jolly adventure, especially as I knew the school was in the neighborhood of the Creightons' home! I'd have a chance, I thought, to look them over without their knowing it.

"Of course, St. Croix, I meant to make myself known to your family very soon. But I had not realized how difficult that was going to be. I got in deeper every day. And it was such fun, I didn't want to give up my lark and my freedom and become Lady Sylvia! And it was all such a marvelous school of acting for me; I was proving to myself that I could act—mastering that dialect with its extraordinary inflections; and succeeding in taking you in, St. Croix, so far beyond my highest hopes!

"It was when you were pointed out to me, St. Croix, at that barn dance that the idea first came to me to pass myself off to you as a Pennsylvania Dutch girl—for I thought it would give me such a chance as no girl had ever had before to learn to know my possible future husband!"

"I'm afraid," St. Croix murmured, "you think you learned to know him too well!"

"I'm afraid, St. Croix, I did!"

"Do you think it was fair to take me unawares like that?"

"Why not?"

Suddenly a new realization came to him that turned him a degree colder than he already was. "But if you were the teacher," he exclaimed, "why, then, it was you that Marvin was all the time seeing at that schoolhouse! It was to you my father paid five thousand dollars to get away! My G—d!"

"Yes, wasn't that a sprightly scene! That's what I'm going to see your father about. I ran home to England with that money to feed my starving parents. Now I'm going to make a clean breast of it all to your father and then if he'll let me borrow what I've still got of that five thousand, I'll go to Hollywood with it. The only blot on my family escutcheon," she sighed, "is my having taken that bribe from your father! But I needed it."

"Will you tell me," demanded St. Croix, frowning darkly, "is Marvin in love with you?"

"I'm sure I don't know. He never told me so, the one time I met him unprofessionally."

"And you are perfectly confident, are you, that Marvin had no suspicions at all as to who you were?"

"I fancy he had several suspicions. Oh, St. Croix, it's going to be awfully embarrassing, facing them all! Especially your awful father after my taking that money from him! It makes me shudder! When we get there, St. Croix, let me walk in behind you, will you?—and I promise to bring up a good, solid rear in the procession! Oh, but I'm nervous about it!"

"To see you sitting there looking like Meely Schwenckton and talking straight English!—it's the d—t knockout I've ever experienced!" St. Croix almost groaned.

"Didn't I do the part to the life?" she amazingly appealed for applause. "Now I can go to Hollywood not only to offer Myself, but my Piece as well—for I've written a scenario of this weird, wild escapade, St. Croix, that they can't resist! You'll see yourself in a 'movie' and find out just how—just what you're like!"

"Sylvia!" He leaned forward and took her hand. (They had their end of the car pretty much to themselves.) "Give up this Hollywood idea! You know how I love you—"

"'How,'" she repeated thoughtfully, as she gently withdrew her hand. "Yes, I know 'how'."

"But look here! You're not going to hold me to account for treating you like the creature you pretended to be!"

"What sort of a creature was I pretending to be?"

"You know what I mean, Sylvia!"

"Yet you made love to that creature! A man's standards," she shook her head over it, "are certainly low!"

"They're high enough when it comes to choosing a wife, Sylvia!"

"Then let a woman's standards be as high when choosing a husband!"

"You don't know life, my dear, or you wouldn't say such an impossible thing! My own standards are far more fastidious than the average!"

"Gracious!"

"If you'll marry me, I'll worship and reverence and adore you all my life long!"

"My dear St. Croix, I can't imagine anything more uncomfortable than being 'reverenced'—heavens! You've known Meely Schwenckton much longer and better than you've known Cousin Sylvia and I'm afraid if you married me, you'd be far more likely to bully and browbeat the meek and lowly Meely than to 'worship, reverence and adore' the Lady Sylvia! You're so used to bullying me, I couldn't risk it!"

"You actually believe I could ever for a moment confound you with the stupid, vulgar girl you pretended to be?"

"You made love to that girl and would have despoiled and ravished her!"

He winced and looked shocked. "Please! Such words on your lips!"

"Bunk! Bosh! You would have done to her what you consider indecent even to speak of to me! Do you think I forget what you told her of your feelings, about your marriage? You said to her, 'I will marry my cousin because I shall enjoy the prestige this marriage will give to me and to my children.' You weren't even hoping for love in your marriage. That you would find outside of marriage—with girls like Meely Schwenckton!"

"I hadn't seen you then, Sylvia!"

"You were planning to marry one girl while you were trying your best to seduce another! And in the face of that, you dare to speak of marriage to me?"

"Yes! Because I love you! I was mad about 'Meely' and you are she—with just the difference that turns desire into worship!"

"I'm afraid, St. Croix, that Marvin's repudiating me is more to my taste! You see, my dear cousin, I know too well how unchivalrous you are to womanhood, how you dishonor it and ravage it!"

Again he winced and drew back. "I cannot bear," he frowned, disgust in his eyes, "to hear such coarse language on the lips of a girl I respect!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Ancient Stone Unveiled

The "Brus Stane," which dates fram 1304, and was lost for 150 years, was recently installed permanently in the staircase of the town hall at Annan, Scotland. At the ceremonies the unveiling was by Sir Robert Bruce. The stone was originally part of the ancient "Castle of Brus" at Annan. After its disappearance for a century and a half it was found ten years ago in a North Devon garden.

Child Tires Quickly of Games or Sports

By holding a stopwatch on ten busy three-year old boys and girls, a psychologist at McGill university, Montreal, has found that a child of this age is usually interested in one thing for just about eight minutes. After that, some new amusement or occupation must be produced. Even when three-year-olds at home or at nursery schools are most absorbed, they cannot be expected to spend more than half an hour at one kind of occupation, according to K. M. Banham Bridges, who describes the experiment in a report to the Pedagogical seminary. Boys in the experiment liked best building with large bricks, and other occupations in which they could use the entire body freely. The girls preferred sitting at a table matching colors or fitting cylinders into different kinds of holes. The girls showed an interest in a wider variety of activities than the boys and their interest in a task lasted a little longer, the psychologist reports.

World's Great Writers Found Work Laborious

On one occasion, John Ruskin was being interviewed by a reporter, who expressed his admiration of the seeming ease with which that great master of prose produced his books.

"My dear sir," said Ruskin, "you have no idea of the labor and pain it is to me to write. I will show you a great writer's work, who could write as easily—as you have justly said—as the flow of water in a river." He thereupon produced the MS. of Scott's "Fortunes of Nigel," and continued, "Examine that; it is just as Scott wrote it, in his own clear, neat hand." Then he showed the interviewer the manuscript of one of his own works, which he had just finished. It was a mass of alterations and erasures—scarcely one sentence remaining as it was originally written.

Thus it has almost always been with the giants of literature. Carlyle's manuscript was the despair of the compositors, because of the manifold alterations and interpolations. Emerson is said to have often spent from six months to a year over the compositions of one or two short essays. His object was to condense his thoughts into the fewest possible words. Hawthorne "passed the day in writing stories, and the night in burning them"—so hypercritical was he regarding his own work.

R. L. Stevenson confessed to have rewritten whole chapters of one of his books as often as five or six times, and one chapter eight times himself, once by his wife—his wife's version being the second last.

Alphonse Daudet, in speaking of his method of work, said: "I write slowly, very slowly, and revise and revise. I am never satisfied with my work. My books go through many processes. To begin with, I fill my notebooks. Each note as it is used is scratched out in red or blue pencil. From these notes, and the tablet of my memory, I write out in copy books the first copy for my novel. I write this first copy on alternate pages of my copy book, and leave the opposite pages blank. When the book is finished in its rough state, I rewrite it page by page on the blank sheets. The page on the right is the amended copy of the page on the left. Then my wife looks at this second copy, and suggests to me what improvements might be made. I note these down. Then I rewrite the whole book again."—Weekly Scotsman.

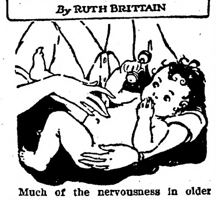
Don't Make a Toy Out of Baby
—Babies Have Nerves—
By RUTH BRITTAIN



Much of the nervousness in older children can be traced to the overstimulation during infancy, caused by regarding baby as a sort of animated toy for the amusement of parents, relatives and friends. Baby may be played with, but not for more than a quarter of an hour to an hour daily. Beyond that, being handled, tickled, caused to laugh or even scream, will sometimes result in vomiting, and invariably causes irritability, crying or sleeplessness.

Fretfulness, crying and sleeplessness from this cause can easily be avoided by treating baby with more consideration, but when you just can't see what is making baby restless or upset, better give him a few drops of pure, harmless Castoria. It's amazing to see how quickly it calms baby's nerves and soothes him to sleep; yet it contains no drugs or opiates. It is purely vegetable—the recipe is on the wrapper. Leading physicians prescribe it for colic, cholera, diarrhea, constipation, gas on stomach and bowels, feverishness, loss of sleep and all other "upsets" of babyhood. Over 25 million bottles used a year shows its overwhelming popularity.

With each bottle of Castoria, you get a book on Motherhood, worth its weight in gold. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package so you'll get genuine Castoria. There are many imitations.

The temperature of the spots on the sun is 2,000 degrees lower than the rest of the sun's surface, but they are still extremely hot.

Hayfield—The Farmers' State bank of Hayfield has taken over the Citizens' State bank. The merged institutions will have a total of $750,000 in deposits.

Gonvick—Three thousand acres along the Lost river north of here was swept by a grass fire. Several buildings and haystacks were destroyed on the meadows along the river.

Duluth—Interlake navigation from the Duluth-Superior harbor opened May 1, when the freighters King and Queen of the Poker fleet of the Minnesota Atlantic Transit Co., steamed through the ship canal here.

Minneapolis—Representative men from seven Minnesota towns met in the University of Minnesota library building to form a state safety council as part of the League of Minnesota Municipalities.

Brainerd—Local citizens will vote May 23 on issuing $250,000 in bonds for construction of two new school buildings, one would be a senior, junior high and grade school and the other a junior high and grade school.

Wells—Fred Hanson, furniture dealer and undertaker here, died suddenly while directing the funeral of M. L. Repogle of Easton. He was stricken during the service in the cemetery.

Minneapolis—Only two states in the union draw more tourists each year than does Minnesota. Tourist traffic brought $82,000,000 into the state last year. That sum is equal to one-quarter of the value of the state's great wheat crop.

Minneapolis—A squadron of United States navy airplanes will fly to the Wold-Chamberlain airport to participate in the northwest aircraft show May 24 to 27, Norman G. Warinske, director of the Aircraft Association says. A delegation of army ships from Selfridge field may attend also.

St. Paul—Plans to raise a fund of $60,000 to $75,000 for an educational campaign over the state in favor of the good roads plan of Charles M. Babcock, state highway commissioner, were initiated at a meeting of the executive committee of the Minnesota Good Roads Association.

Minneapolis—The condition of winter wheat in the northwest, where it is a crop of growing importance, is considerably better than in other sections of the country, the Northwestern National Bank of Minneapolis points out in its April business and agricultural review.

St. Paul—An increase of $435,388 in internal revenue receipts from Minnesota during the first nine months of the current fiscal year, compared with the same period last year, is shown by a report issued by the treasury department. The total receipts, derived mostly from income taxes, were $21,424,356.

Minneapolis—Three decades in the pages of history were turned back in the banquet room of the Nicollet hotel. It was the thirtieth anniversary celebration of the first assembly of the Thirteenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, now known as the Thirteenth Minnesota Regimental Association.

Baudette—Residents of the Northwest Angle, isolated from here by water, are for the first time getting mail during the spring breakup. William Baucha of French Portage has constructed a motor-driven craft which can operate on water and ice alike. It has a boat-like body, with runners which enables it to climb out of the water when ice is reached.

Hackensack—A seal and walrus farm, the only one in the United States, is to be established this spring near Hackensack. On a virgin lake, surrounded by a heavy pine forest, Captain Charles F. Adams plans to establish the only commercial breeding center for seals in North America. With a nucleus of 29 seals, which he now has he will start operations, when the seals have finished their tour in vaudeville.

At the same time, Minnesota's two other Farmer-Labor representatives in congress formally filed for re-election. They are Congressman O. J. Kvale of Benson, who seeks re-election from the eleventh district, and William L. Carss, Duluth, who seeks the Farmer-Labor nomination for re-election from the eighth district.

Minneapolis—Floyd B. Olson will not run for governor this year, he announced in a letter, finally and formally declining the indorsement of the Farmer-Labor Association for that office. Mr. Olson's chief reason, as stated in his letter of declination, is that his duties as county attorney of Hennepin county require all his time. He made the campaign for governor four years ago, while county attorney, and found out then how each occupation interfered with the other.

St. Paul—Representative Harold Knutson appeared before the emerchant marine and fisheries committee in behalf of his bill to establish a fish hatchery at the Lake of the Woods and made a statement in support of the bill.

NEW DRAPERIES for A FEW CENTS
By Mae Martin

All of us realize nowadays how bright-colored draperies seem to invite people in, and how warm touches of color in spreads, cushions and runners help to make us love our own surroundings.

No woman need deny herself these touches of cheer, because they can easily be had at the expense of a few cents and a little planning. Curtains that are faded or drab in color can be made bright and pleasing with a package or so of Diamond Dyes. Then spreads, covers, runners, etc., can be tinted or dyed to match. Anyone can do it. Tinting with Diamond Dyes is as easy as bluing, and dyeing takes just a little more time. Brilliant new colors appear like magic, right over the old, faded colors. Diamond dyes give true, fadeless colors. They are the kind of dyes used when the cloth was made. Only Diamond Dyes produce perfect results. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of dollar-saving suggestions for beautifying your home and clothes. Sixty-four pages, fully illustrated in colors. It's FREE. Just write Mae Martin, Home Service Department, Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

Here's Speedy Relief From Bunion Pains and Soft Corns

Get a two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) today. Every well stocked drug store has this, with the distinct understanding that your money will be cheerfully returned if it does not reduce the inflammation, soreness, and pain much quicker than any remedy you ever used.

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the inflammation is gone.

And as for Soft Corns a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with pads, shields, or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

Every good druggist guarantees the first bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil to end your foot troubles or money back.

Boost For The New Highway

We recently heard a story that is worth passing on to our readers because it touches on good roads, a subject of vital interest to everyone in Holt. Men were seeking a right-of-way for a road in the Kentucky mountains. Some were giving it freely, others were charging for it. One old pioneer, when told the highway would run right thru his garden, said: "Go ahead; take the garden. Move the house if you want to and I'll even pay the expense of moving it. I have hauled truck in the mud for 40 years and now I'm through. That's my answer.

Every year finds good roads supporters more numerous in this section. More and more our people are coming to realize that our salvation so far as prosperity and living conditions are concerned depends on the kind of highways we have and the number of them. That being true, it is a bad idea for anyone to stand in in the way of progress by contesting a right-of-way. If it is impossible to donate the land, then cut the cost to the lowest possible figure. No man can afford these days to block a highway improvement, because when he stands in the way of road building he is standing in his own light.

The old Kentuckian set a good example for the people of every community as well as his own. Let us hope that the same spirit will prevail in this section at all times, and especially now when we are waiting for a new road.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXIV

System In Dairy Work: Telling "Jim to help John do the chores" often makes the chores a quarrelsome and disagreeable job. Jim and John should each have certain things to do from the beginning to the end of the chores and each should be responsible for that particular part of the work every day throughout the week. This should also apply to "the boss" and the hired man.

Calling the boys to "get up" in the morning, or to meals, or to go to bed at night, is poor practice. If 5 a. m. is the time to get up and 9 p. m. the time to retire, each one should be held responsible for their own alarm clock. The meals should be ready at a certain time and work arranged accordingly. Sunday work should be specified as to hours and time off.

"The only really objectionable thing about you, my dear, is your rotten sense of propriety. You need to be shocked out of it. And, believe me, I'll do my cousinly best for you in that regard! But I can't marry you, St. Croix. And it isn't only because of 'Meely'—it's hardly that at all. It's because you and I could never be mates. When you know me better, you'll realize that; you and I are everything the other can't stand! If I had to live with your standards, St. Croix, I'd feel as cramped as though I were in jail. And you'd have fits if you had to reckon with a free-lance like me who finds all sorts and conditions of people so interesting and likable that your taking 'classes' so solemnly, your respect for a bauble like a title, and all that, just seems to me awfully funny!"

"You don't really know me, Sylvia!" he pleaded. "With 'Meely' I was not my real (and better) self! I was of course a cad! But that was not my true self, Sylvia," he insisted. "If you'll give me a chance to prove myself—"

"St. Croix, shall I tell you how impossible it would be to me to marry you? Just as impossible as it would be for you to marry that poor Meely Schwenckton!"

St. Croix recoiled—for he knew when she said that that he was beaten.

It was the first time in all his life that he had been humiliated. And by a girl!

CHAPTER XI

Mr. Creighton, senior, after the first shock and embarrassment of discovering the identity of his wife's relative, Lady Sylvia St. Croix, with the teacher, Miss Schwenckton, whom he had ignominiously bribed to abandon his son when it was his dearest wish that she should marry him, regarded the episode with vast amusement; Mrs. Creighton and Sylvia liked each other on sight; Marvin accepted the confirmation of his suspicions with outward calm, but inward delirium; but St. Croix, almost as soon as he had delivered the girl over to his mother, had escaped from his own devastating situation by fleeing to Florida on the pretext of looking into his father's interests there.

As these interests were not so pressing as to necessitate his leaving home at this crucial time, his action could be interpreted by his family in only one way—Sylvia must have given him to understand quite unequivocally that he, the younger son, was not an acceptable substitute for his elder brother—even though the elder had long since flatly refused to so much as consider the question of marrying her.

Mr. Creighton could now only hope that the apprehensions he had suffered lest Marvin had fallen a prey to the charms of the teacher of William Penn school were indeed well founded.

The very morning after her arrival she asked "Cousin Creighton" to let her have a talk with him alone. Shut up with him in his study, the revelation she there made to him of her ambition and determination to exploit herself at Hollywood came to him as a blow.

"The only way you could stop me, Cousin Creighton," she answered his arguments against her plan, with sympathy in her tone for his manifest dejection, "would be to take back your money—what's left of it." She pushed toward him on the table between them a pile of bills—a pensive wistfulness in the lovely eyes she raised to his. "I can't go, of course, without your money."

"And if you can't go, what then? Will you," he asked hopefully, "then marry one of my sons?"

"If I said yes to that," she replied in alarm, drawing back the bills, "you'd take back your money! No, if I can't go with your money, I'll earn the money. And if you won't give me a job at mining, I warn you I'll turn evangelist! I've heard there's money in that. I'd make piles, for I'd be a new American sensation—an English titled woman prancing and ranting over your broad land as a Soul-Saver! I could do it, too!"

"Yes, and would, by G—d!" he exclaimed. "Keep the money, in heaven's name!"

"Thank you. Then that's settled."

"If you fail at Hollywood?" he gloomily inquired.

"Don't wish it on me—please! If I fail, I'll come back and marry any of your sons that want me. Only I draw the line at St. Croix. I couldn't," she shook her head, "marry St. Croix."

"Why?" asked Creighton testily, wounded in his paternal pride.

"First, because I'm not in love with him. Then I think a girl owes it to her children to pick out a good father for them—and St. Croix strikes me as too self-absorbed to make a successful husband and father. His own interests would always be first with him."

"St. Croix is a very fine young man!" his father warmly defended him. "Sensible and well balanced. No wild vagaries—"

"But I like rebels and vagabonds so much better than 'fine young men'!"

"Oh, then you mean," said Creighton, again picking up hope, "that you will marry Marvin if Hollywood disappoints you?"

"Not unless he asks me to."

"If he doesn't ask you to," exclaimed Mr. Creighton, "he's a—"

"Yes, isn't he! I think so too. But though I'd never marry a man that hadn't proposed to me, if I never got married, that question need not engage us, Cousin Creighton, because I'm not going to fail at Hollywood!"

* * * * * * * *

It was a few days later that Marvin Creighton, one evening after dinner, standing in front of the library fire, looked down reflectively over his folded arms upon his radiant young cousin who reclined lazily and with a maddening grace on the big couch that stood before the fireplace.

"Is This a Proposal, Marvin?"

"It's incredible—utterly incredible!" he voiced his reflections.

"Yes, isn't it?—everything! But what in particular were you referring to?"

"That you—sitting there in front of me—you!—are the girl I said I wouldn't marry! Why didn't some one suggest that I cross to England and look you over first?"

"Probably because they were all too sensible to think you'd pay any attention to such a good suggestion. And if you had, you'd probably have found me flown from home to elude you."

"You see, you were offered to me," he explained, "like a mark-down at Woolworth's! Too cheap an article, it seemed to me, to take as a wife—seeing I did have a few dreams of fair women that were not so purchasable! And now, if I'm correctly informed as to 'the fury of a woman scorned,' there can't be the least hope for me—can there, Sylvia?"

"Is this a proposal, Marvin?"

"Well, I'm not sure it is. I'm not so conceited as to think my worth to you could measure up to the worth of a career for which you are highly talented! So I don't think I am proposing. I don't believe I intend to—if I have any influence with myself."

"Let's be engaged, Marvin, until I see how I make out at Hollywood. If I succeed, then no wedding bells for Meely and you'll have to jilt me again!"

"If only," he fetched a deep breath, "you hadn't that fatal talent! For we're mates, Sylvia, it's written in the heavens! I believe, you know, that you and I are mates in the real and lasting sense—for it's you I love, sweet child, not just your epidermis, lovely as it is—"

"My what?"

"I can think of you as old and wrinkled and I want and love you just the same—"

She warbled, "'Believe me if all those endearing—' But that's such old stuff—can't you tell me something a little more up to date?"

"Our sort of love, Sylvia, is so rare (or so it seems to me) that it's an awful pity, don't you think, to let it go by us even for the sake of a brilliant career?"

"Go by you, you mean?" she sweetly inquired; "for I didn't say I was in love with any one in particular."

"I said, didn't I, that we were mates? I'm your mate, too, if you only knew it—as much as you're mine!"

"When did you begin to feel that way?" she asked with a bright interest, her eyes shining up into his with rather a feverish excitement.

"From the first day I met you in your school! I couldn't keep off you! You had me—in the hollow of your hand!"

"Oh, gee, I didn't know it! And, Marvin! I've got to hold on to myself like anything or you'd have me in the hollow of your dear hand—and I don't want to be in any one's hands—not even in your strong and tender ones!—for I want to act!"

"I've seen you with those school children—I think your bigger career, Sylvia, lies in your having a brood of your own—I don't shock you, child, do I?"

"Well, yes, when you suggest a whole 'brood'! I think that's too many! I wish," sighed Sylvia, "I could have babies and a career, too. If I insisted on that, would you jilt me?"

"But, dear child, I can't live in California. Not even in New York. My work will always be here. And what kind of a marriage would that be—you in California and I in Pennsylvania?"

"You wouldn't give up your work for marriage; why should I? What is going to become of marriage when women's professions become as important and as inevitable to them as a man's is to him? I wonder!"

"Do you really think, Sylvia, that being a screen actress is as big a thing as rearing children?"

"It would depend, I should say, upon the sort of children you rear. I'd consider it an awful waste of life to bring up most of the people one knows!"

"But you and I, Sylvia," said Marvin solemnly, "might get some satisfaction from bringing up a family of—well, honest, fearless truth-seekers, prophets of a new gospel—"

"Oh, come, Marvin, let's give them a chance to be themselves!"

"That's what I want them to be! So few of us are ever ourselves! We're forced into a mold that's quite unlike our real selves! Let's rear a family that shall be a nucleus to start something—"

"But it's so dangerous, these days, to start anything—"

"Let them start the long-looked-for 'good-will to men' era. It's about due, if humanity is to survive, don't you think? Well, what do you say? Shall we?"

"This is the queerest proposal I ever had!"

"Well, I can't seem to do anything, even propose to a girl, according to pattern!"

"But you see, Marvin dear, love lasts such a short time. My career on the screen would last rather longer."

"Ours won't be the kind that doesn't last! It will be the kind that grows! It will—"

"Oh, you're young! You sound sixteen! I'm not so sure. But it does not really matter, does it?—whether it lasts or not? It's the supreme thing now!"

"You admit that?" he eagerly demanded.

"Oh, yes, Marvin! You've gone and dimmed the glory of the screen for me so that I don't feel half so enamored of it as I did—"

"I tell you, Sylvia!" He flung himself on the couch at her side. "You go on out to your old Hollywood, my dear, and try it out. For if you didn't give it a trial, you'd never be satisfied, never be sure you had not made a mistake—"

"I might even throw it up to you that you'd deprived the world of a great star—"

"That's what I want to avert. So you go on out there—and then when you decide to be mine, I'll have you fast!"

"I won't go a step unless you promise to come to see me over some week-end."

"It's three thousand miles across this continent, you know—or probably you don't know! You probably think California is a suburb of Philadelphia! You need to travel out to Hollywood to pick up some United States geography on the way."

"Now, Marvin," she feebly protested as he slipped a hard, strong arm about her and drew her close, "if you really make love to me, I'm lost!"

[THE END]

Fragments of Bottle Good Legal Evidence

Fragments of a broken bottle once settled a legal dispute as to the location of the original corner post of a surveyed tract. It was customary in the old surveys to place broken bottles, crockery or other articles that would resist decay in the holes where the corner posts were to be set, and notes of such deposits were recorded by the surveyor in his book.

On this particular occasion, when an effort was being made to establish the location of a post in Canada which had been set sixty years previously, the surveyor's gang dug for two days over an area covering more than fifty square feet. Finally the diggers unearthed broken glass with embossings that corresponded to the notes in the original surveyor's book. With this point established, more than thirty posts in the vicinity were restored and the dispute over the boundary lines was settled.—Kansas City Star.

EASY LESSONS IN AUCTION BRIDGE

By PAUL H. SEYMOUR
Author of "Highlights on Auction Bridge"

(Copyright, by Hoyle, Jr.)

Article Thirty-Six.

Rules and Etiquette

I RECEIVE many questions regarding the bidding and counting of Auction; and there also seems to be a great lack of knowledge among ordinary players regarding the laws. In a purely social game it is not customary to exact penalties and require strict observance of rules. If a card is faced in dealing, a new deal seldom is asked for; and if a person leads out of turn or if declarer leads out of the wrong hand a simple correction is made and the play proceeds. Even where a revoke is made it usually is corrected when discovered without exacting the payment of the penalty of two tricks.

There can be no objection to such customs, but there are a few laws the repeated and habitual breaking of which renders a player very objectionable. For instance, when as declarer a player picks up one of dummy's cards, holds it in his hand a moment or two—perhaps whistling a senseless tune at the same time—puts it back and plays another one. The rule reads "When it is declarer's play from dummy and he touches a card (unless in arranging) that card is played." If all players would insist upon this law being followed much pleasure would be added to the game.

Some matters which are not subject to law and which are really trivial seem to worry many players. In what order shall dummy's cards be laid down? Shall red and black suits be alternated? Is it right to lay down dummy's trumps before senior has led? Shall the one who cuts the cards complete the cut?

When there are so many important things to occupy a player's attention and thought why devote time and energy to such trifling matters?

It is customary to put dummy's trumps at his right and to alternate the red and black suits, but there is no law regarding either of these matters.

The player who as dummy always lays down his trumps before the lead is simply making himself conspicuous with his undue haste.

So many people were troubled about completing the cut that the latest laws do recognize this point and say that the cut should be completed by the dealer.

There are many habits or mannerisms exhibited by some players which cannot be stopped by any law but which are breaches of etiquette and should be avoided as such. The only legitimate way to talk across the table is in the Auction Bridge language. If one confines himself to that he may at times give his partner a very accurate picture of his hand; but when he passes in a loud voice with a disgusted manner he is talking a language which is taboo at the Auction table.

Much unfair information may be conveyed by one's manner. All players should realize that to be acceptable at their friends' card tables they must be above reproach in these matters. I have been asked what can be done when a player revokes intentionally because he can gain more than two tricks by it and so be ahead after paying the penalty. There is but one thing to do—shun him or be frank and flatly refuse to play with him. Auction Bridge is a game for gentlemen and ladies and all who persist in breaking the code of ethics thereby forfeit their rights to play with real Bridgers.

The fact that there is an Auction Bridge language never has been sufficiently emphasized. One would not think of going to a foreign country and trying to enter fully into the lives of the natives without learning their language; yet that is precisely what thousands of people do when they sit down to play Auction with good players. Their partners bid something, either announcing certain holdings or possibly calling upon them (in the Auction language) to say or do something, and they sit in blissful ignorance because they understand not the language.

If you are going to play the game why not learn the language so that you may play it right? Learn the rules, what is meant by a bid of one or a double or a pass, each one of which speaks volumes to him whose ears are trained. Why allow your mediocrity in Auction to make you a social "undesirable" when you know that the good player is eagerly sought after by hosts and hostesses.

Above all do not be erratic. Play to the best of your ability, and after you learn the Auction Bridge language always tell the truth to your partner, for the highest tribute that can be paid to a player is to say that he is a "dependable partner."

Only a Belief

They tell the story of a famous actor who was often accustomed to show a great interest in the lesser lights about him. One day he was good-naturedly conversing with one of his stage hands. "And what, my man, is your vocation?" queried the condescending matinee idol.

"I'm a Baptist," was the reply.

"No, no, good fellow, that is your belief. I want to know your vocation. For example, I am an actor."

Said the scene shifter: "Naw, that's your belief."

King's Favorites Are to Travel in Style

Two twelve-passenger "harem cars," inclosed and screened, are among the fleet of motor cars ready in London for shipment to Mecca. The automobiles are for the accommodation of more than one hundred members and attendants of the Arabian court who are to travel through the country by this means in future.

The "harem cars" cost more than $250,000, are capable of a speed of 60 miles an hour and are finished in aluminum and white. The assemblage of automobiles includes also twenty-four-seaters for the royal guards and a spectacular seven-seat touring car for the sovereign himself.

The women of the harem will sit in their cars six to a side, on crossed legs, facing each other and with rests for their elbows. Ibn Saoud, the mighty Arab chief, has ordered a car all in silver and with searchlights that will light up the road a mile ahead.

Immune

Little Martha was much disappointed when she heard that the camping trip that had been planned by her group of girl scouts had been postponed because some of the girls had got ptomaine poisoning on a hike the week before. "That's silly," she declared, "Why, I was out where it was growing all over the hills, and I didn't get poisoned!"

Encouragement for Weak, Nervous Women

Sedalia, Mo.—"For some time, until about one year ago, I was suffering with pain in my side and back and was very nervous. This weakened me until I had but little strength. Finally Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was recommended to me as a very good remedy for women and I started taking it. I began to improve right from the start. The aches, pains and nervousness left me and I soon felt better than ever before. I gained in weight and felt stronger than I ever did."—Mrs. Cora Curry, 207 E. Salina St.

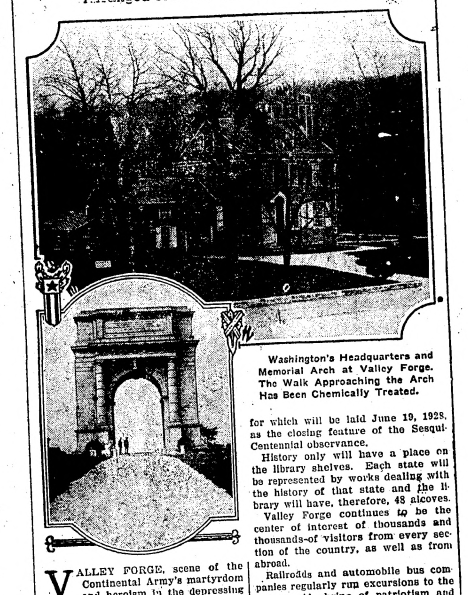
VALLEY FORGE PLANS TWO MEMORIALS TO HONOR HEROIC SOLDIERS OF 1778

Library and Non-Denominational Church Will Rise on Broad Acres Near Philadelphia — Celebration Arranged for June to Mark 150th Year.



Washington's Headquarters and Memorial Arch at Valley Forge. The Walk Approaching the Arch Has Been Chemically Treated.

VALLEY FORGE, scene of the Continental Army's martyrdom and heroism in the depressing days of 1777 and 1778, will furnish the background for a great national observance of the 150th anniversary.

Imposing memorials are planned for the big cantonment outside of Philadelphia, chiefly a Washington Memorial Library and a Washington Memorial Church, non-denominational.

While the details for the celebration have not yet been announced, it is believed that they will be most comprehensive and picturesque, including participation first of all by the thirteen original states and then by all forty-eight states.

The Washington memorials will rise on the site of the Zulich mansion, destroyed last spring by fire. The Rev. W. Herbert Burk, founder and rector of the Washington Memorial Chapel, has received assurances of gifts that will make the memorials possible.

His congregation has bought a site covering 15 acres for the buildings and an unidentified donor has promised funds for the Library, the cornerstone for which will be laid June 19, 1928, as the closing feature of the Sesqui-Centennial observance.

History only will have a place on the library shelves. Each state will be represented by works dealing with the history of that state and the library will have, therefore, 48 alcoves.

Valley Forge continues to be the center of interest of thousands and thousands of visitors from every section of the country, as well as from abroad.

Railroads and automobile bus companies regularly run excursions to the famous old shrine of patriotism and on Sundays and holidays even the broad acres of Valley Forge are taxed for space by the huge throngs. In addition many visitors travel by private motor cars over the excellent roads, kept in splendid condition by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

All roads to Valley Forge run through a landscape of remarkable beauty, artists agree, and these roads are treated, as necessity arises, with chemicals, especially calcium chloride, to lay the dust.

Only 32 miles from Philadelphia, the shrine has long been one of the favorite objectives for daily excursions for Philadelphians, as well as for visitors to that city who have combined the Valley Forge trip with a tour of other places of historic interest, such as Independence Hall, the Betsy Ross House and other relics of the Revolution.

That interest is expected to be stimulated by the forthcoming celebration.

CLOTHES IDEAS FROM ABROAD

By Mae Martin

Last fall when I was in France, I admired the dress which the daughter of our hostess was wearing, and she confessed it was three years old, originally rose-beige, now dyed a rich, deep shade of red! The French are eternally surprising you with thrifty little tricks like that—tricks which it pays to imitate.

Most of us have dresses which, if allowed to remain their original color, are discarded or seldom worn. Redyed, they become favorites again.

Just get a package or two of true, fadeless Diamond Dyes, and try your hand at tinting or dyeing. You'll be amazed to see how easy it is to use Diamond Dyes. They never disappoint you. The "know-how" is in the dyes. They are real dyes like those used when the cloth was made. They never give things that redyed look, like make-shift, inferior dyes. The more than sixty colors you can get from them include everything that's fashionable.

My new 64-page illustrated book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of money-saving hints for renewing clothes and draperies. It's FREE. Write for it, NOW, to Mae Martin, Home Service Dept., Diamond Dyes. Burlington, Vermont.

SHE WAS SLIGHTLY MISTAKEN

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"THERES George Putnam, now," exclaimed Ida Allen, as the train pulled into Helena. "Congratulations," she added, mischievously, "I'll hurry out so as not to embarrass you when I congratulate him."

"What do you mean?" asked her companion, opening her hazel eyes wide with surprise, either real or simulated. Ida thought the latter and laughed, saying, while putting on her hat, "Oh! You didn't fool anybody when you announced you were going to visit your aunt in Seattle. We all knew just about the time George was expecting to sail for China. Still, I don't know why you wanted to pass up a big wedding, unless you thought it more romantic to elope. What a joke, though, that I should strike the same train on my way home from visiting mother."

The other woman laughed mirthlessly as she said, "Your wild conjectures are a bigger joke. George Putnam proposed to Elsie Green, at the Dalton masquerade, and—got turned down, and—I don't want any woman's leavings."

"I don't believe it," cried Ida, indignantly. "He has been daffy over you for a year."

"Over my money, you mean," was the cynical rejoinder, "but Elsie has more."

"For shame, Joan. George isn't that kind of man. Somebody has been trying to make trouble between you. He didn't propose to Elsie Green."

"Ask him," taunted Joan, "you say he is on the platform."

"I will," retorted Ida, flouncing out of the pullman, without even bidding her fellow traveler good-by.

Left alone, Joan sank back in her seat and closed her eyes, entirely absorbed in her painful reflections. George Putnam filled her mind, and she smiled derisively although tears welled up in her eyes. She finally roused herself as the voice of the porter's "las' call for lunch" rang through the car; then she rose, languidly, and followed him into the diner.

The dining-car conductor seated her at a table where a man was reading a newspaper that effectually concealed his face. Two or three minutes later the waiter brought his order, when he put down the paper, and Joan found herself face to face with George Putnam.

She flushed, then bowed formally, murmuring his name. He returned her salutation with great composure, saying, "Ida told me you were on this train. I was going to look you up after lunch, as I could see no reason why a rejected suitor should consider himself a pariah."

He smiled as he spoke, but Joan made no answer, merely folded and unfolded her napkin nervously and fingered the cutlery by her plate.

Her brain was in such a turmoil that she could not converse intelligently. She looked out of the window, but the wind blew the engine smoke so that at times it entirely veiled the landscape and she really saw nothing. As she kept her eyes turned toward the window he could watch her unobserved. A shadow crossed his handsome face as he noted her golden red hair, matchless complexion and lithe, graceful figure, and the dimple that nestled so close to the sweet red lips.

He lingered over his luncheon and gave an extra order so as not to finish before her. As she began to eat he caught her eyes turned on his face with a speculative expression in their depths, which was easy for him to understand after his conversation with Mrs. Allen.

They left the diner together, and, as they reached the outside platform, he said, resolutely, "I want to explain about the Dalton masquerade, Joan. Get your wraps and we'll go out on the back platform of the observation car, where we can, probably, have a chance for private conversation, as it is pretty cold this afternoon."

His assurance nettled her. It was in her mind to refuse his request, or rather command; still, as they walked through the car that contained her berth she picked up her coat and went on with him to the observation car. He took a couple of camp stools as they went out to the platform, placed hers in the most sheltered corner, then sat down at an angle where his broad shoulders would shield her still more from the wind.

"So," he said without preamble, after they were seated, "you think I proposed to Elsie Green at the Dalton masquerade and you don't want 'her leavings?'"

The satirical smile on his lips, and the mocking light in the eyes that were looking Joan squarely in the face, again roused the girl's indignation.

"I know you proposed to her," she retorted angrily. "I suppose you liked her best all the time and were just fooling with me to make her jealous. Then, when she refused you, you thought you might do worse than take me."

In answer to this unpleasant speech George laughed long and heartily, which so exasperated Joan that she rose, and would have left him and gone inside the car, had he not detained her with a strong yet tender hand.

"Forgave me," he said, still laughing, "but who told you such a story? It really is awfully funny because I wasn't at the Dalton masquerade."

"What!" exclaimed Joan, forgetting her resentment in surprise, "you told me, yourself, that you were going as the earl of Leicester, and a man, your size, dressed in that costume was there, and—proposed to Elsie Green. I saw and heard him myself," she added excitedly, "I was in that little curtained alcove, just off the conservatory. I know you were missing at supper, when we all unmasked, but I supposed you were so fussed by her refusal that you left at once."

Again George laughed gaily, saying, "Fortunately, I can prove an alibi. I expect two telegrams at Spokane, one from my father, and another from Dalton. I wired them both at Helena, after I saw Ida, and learned what you thought about me." He paused, and the merriment died out of his face as he continued, "I was dressing for the masquerade that evening, hoping for an opportunity there to ask you to be my wife, when father phoned that my mother had been taken ill, suddenly, and to come at once. I was hurriedly getting into my street clothes and packing a grip, when Coleman came in. He had just returned from a fishing trip, and I suggested that as he was about my size, he had better take my suit and go to the dance in my place, as it might put Mrs. Dalton out to run shy a man, at the last minute. He didn't need a second invitation after learning Elsie would be there. They grew up together and I believe he proposes to her, regularly, about twice a year. Her money isn't the attraction, either, as she is poor, compared with him. I am glad we have had the chance for this mutual explanation," he added, formally, "as, otherwise, I should have gone away thinking you a heartless coquette. Then, too," he added, a hard note in his voice, "I would not like to be considered a fortune-hunter, as I am not guilty."

He rose to his feet abruptly, saying with exaggerated politeness, "I hope I haven't kept you out here too long. I hope you are not cold."

He stood before her, evidently considering their interview at an end, but she remained seated. Her lips moved, but no sound came from them. A dumb devil seemed to possess her, as she looked up at him, entreatingly, paling and flushing alternately.

"Sit down, George," she managed to articulate at last. "Will you ever forgive my mean suspicions?"

He smiled rather bitterly as he resumed his seat and answered, "Perhaps—when you have read those telegrams, and I—have made my fortune in the Orient."

"I don't want to read the telegrams," she protested. "And—and sometimes it takes a long while to make a fortune. Have you quite forgotten last summer, George?" she pleaded, putting out her hand until it rested on, but not in, his. "Don't you care for me a little still?"

"Care for you—a little," he repeated, his large hand opening suddenly and engulfing her small one, "My God!" he groaned, "I wish it were—a little."

"Then why leave me, when—I want you to stay?"

"Because I have a little pride and self-respect left."

"Have you?" asked Joan, while her quivering lips twisted into a crooked little smile. "I don't believe I have, because I am going to ask you to please marry me in Seattle, and take me to China with you, as—as—Ida expected."

For a minute he looked uncertainly into her sweet, earnest face, flushed with the shame of her unmaidenly request. Then a merry smile chased all the shadows out of his eyes as he answered tenderly, "It would be a pity to disappoint Ida, wouldn't it?"

Fortunately, at that moment, an opportune tunnel enveloped them in darkness.

Snakes' Sting Supply Renewed When Lost

According to experts at the New York zoological park, rattlesnakes in captivity shed their fangs at least twice a year. Nature has provided these snakes with a magazine of fangs that is apparently inexhaustible. If the fangs are extracted the rattlesnake is rendered harmless for only a short period, until new fangs replace those removed. The only effective way of rendering rattlesnakes harmless is by an operation which removes not only the fangs but also a portion of the bone to which the fangs are attached. This operation is very seldom performed by anybody. On this subject the United States biological survey says: "So long as snakes are healthy, teeth will be replaced when lost. Ordinarily harmless snakes have two rows of teeth in the upper jawbone. In the venomous snakes, the upper jaws carry a single pair of functional teeth, the poison fangs, in addition to the undeveloped successional teeth. When either the fangs or the teeth of snakes are dislodged or lost, they are replaced functionally by these supernumerary teeth."—Pathfinder Magazine.

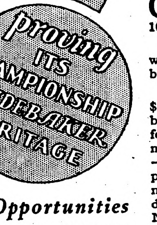
Head-Hunting Lovers

Dyak women urge their husbands, sons and lovers to join in head-hunting expeditions, to prove that they are really men of valor.

In his book, "In Borneo Jungles," Mr. W. O. Krohn says that no Dyak is a real man until he has got a head. So the young Dyak fortifies himself with an orgiastic dance, consults the omens, and sallies forth. When he brings home the head, there is a feast. The whole thing is a rite deeply interwoven in Dyak religion.

STUDEBAKER'S $795 ERSKINE SIX

Sets Ten New Records by Traveling 1000 miles in 984 minutes



proving its CHAMPIONSHIP STUDEBAKER HERITAGE

ON April 26, two strictly stock Erskine Club Sedans each traveled 1000 miles in less than 1000 consecutive minutes.

The run took place at Atlantic City Speedway, and was supervised by officials of the American Automobile Assn. who verified the stock design of the cars.

As a result, ten new records for stock cars under $1000 were established by the Erskine Six. And Studebaker has demonstrated that its 76-year-old traditions for careful building are carried through in the design, materials and workmanship of this low-priced fine car—named for Albert Russel Erskine, Studebaker's president. That is why this car was able to travel 1000 miles at better than a mile a minute—why you can drive your Erskine Six 40 miles an hour even when NEW—why the Erskine is so economical to maintain and to operate.

A drive in the New Erskine will introduce you to a type of performance as sensational for its price class as that of the World's Champion Commander is to the field of higher priced cars.

Dealers' Opportunities

Studebaker assists dealers to conduct their business on a profitable basis—sales training—financing—used car merchandising—advertising helps—accounting—service—etc. No wonder Studebaker-Erskine dealers make money with these 4 great lines: The new President Eight, $1985 to $2485. The World's Champion Commander, $1435 to $1625. The new Dictator, $1195 to $1395. The new Erskine Six, $795 to $965. Write or wire NOW for complete, confidential information if there is no dealer in your town or if you wish to move to a town where the Studebaker-Erskine franchise is available.

Death Thwarts Discovery

Dr. Sidney Rawson Watson, whose death attracted world-wide attention, was believed by his friends to have been on the eve of a great discovery when he was killed while experimenting on himself with new gas. He was found dead in his study wearing a gas mask. Beside him was the latest apparatus for administering gas. A daring experimenter with anesthetics, he often experimented on himself, and he told his friends that he was trying to invent a mixture of gas and oxygen under which a person might be conscious of everything except pain.

Stacking Oats Improves Quality

THE common practice in much of the Corn Belt is to thresh from the shock. Stacking has a number of advantages which offset the reduced cost of threshing from the shock. Stacking insures cleaner threshing and drier and better grain. The oats go through the sweat in the stack and are completely cured at time of threshing. Whether oats are allowed to stand in the shock until threshed or stacked depends on local conditions. Stacking is advisable where early threshing from the shock is not possible, because of the rush of other farm work or the lack of a threshing outfit.

It usually is best to make a stack foundation by laying down fence posts or rails or other light timbers to keep the oats from absorbing water from the ground. In building a stack that will shed water it is essential to keep the center high, well tramped and free from holes. The outer row of bundles should not be tramped so that when the stack settles the straws in the exposed butts will slope downward and shed water. The stack should be "topped out" well to give it as steep a slope as possible.

Efficient Threshing of Oats

IT IS the best practice to allow oats to become well cured in the shock or stack before threshing. Efficient threshing then is assured if the grain is dry.

Where registered pedigreed varieties are being grown, a special effort should be made to see that the separator is thoroughly cleaned at the beginning of the run. Attention to this detail will insure the keeping of varieties in a pure condition for a number of years. It also will prevent the spread of noxious weed seeds from one farm to another.

Bell Ringers Coming To Thief River on June 7

The Scandinavian Bell Ringers from Europe are coming to Thief River Falls for a concert in the auditorium at 8 p. m. June 7.

These internationally known Bell Ringers have just returned from a very successful concert tour in Europe, and will give to the music lovers of Thief River Falls one of their unique bell concerts.

The press, the critics, and the public, in both this country and Europe, have been unanimous in their praise of the surprising beauty and charm of the music extracted from the 189 to 200 bells they play. In fact their work is a revelation to all who hear them; of the never before suspected musical possibilities to be found in bells.

They have developed and beautified the art of handcarillon playing a hundred-fold and after years of incessant study and hard work have put this form of bell music to the forefront.

On the night of their American debut at the Sprinfield auditorium, the Scandinavian Bell Ringers played to three thousand six hundred people. Two weeks later they were given a return engagement. On this second occasion the audience was over four thousand eight hundred, and thousands were turned away. On all occasions where this highly skilled quintet has appeared, hundreds have been unable to get even standing room.

Walmer Risberg and family of Thief River visited with relatives here Wednesday.

Ludvig M. Larson and family moved onto the Adrian Lindholm farm Saturday.

Theo Ness spent last week at Mud Lake plowing for Swan Carlson.

Paul R. Palmer sold his Ford Coupe to R. J. Vieths last week. Mr. Vieths took the car over to Newfolden and sold it again the same day.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson and children and Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Young attended the aeroplane derby at Crookston Sunday afternoon.

Given Reception Sunday

On Sunday evening the congregations of the Nazareth Lutheran church, the Silver Creek and Golden Valley gathered at the church here Sunday evening and gave Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal and children a reception.

The Silver Creek Luther League put on the program which was very good. A sum of money was given the Redal's as a remembrance from their friends.

W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the John Simonson home on June 4th, at 2:30 p. m.

H. O. Hanson and family, Mrs. Leo Horien and daughter Lucile, the Misses Orlene Hagglund and Ruth Engebretson motored to Thief River Saturday where the most of them had some dental work done.

R. J. Vieths sold his Chevrolet coach to a farmer near Wanaska last week.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXV

Warm Weather Warnings: Milk is not only the most perfect food for humans and young stock, but it also furnishes the most favorable source of growth for bacteria. Bacteria makes its most rapid growth at a temperature of from 70 to 90 degrees F. For this reason extra effort and precaution is required during the summer months to produce sweet, fine flavored milk and cream.

All dairy utensils should be washed as soon as passible after use. Rinse first with cold water to remove the milk and then wash with warm water and washing powder, using a dairy brush instead of a cloth. Rinse with boiling water and set in the sun during the day and where the air is free from dust.

Cool the cream in cold water immediately after separating. Have a cream cooling tank to hold the cream cans and through which all the water is pumped from the well to the stock. Your creamery can supply you with a cream cooling tank at cost.

Bunch Your Wool Now

The Pennington County Sheep Breeders' Association are helping the farmers market their wool Many of the farmers are selling through the Wabasha State Pool, but many wish to sell their wool localy and with this idea many of the members of this association are bunching their wool together and will sell it to the highest bidders as soon as it is all collected. This should be somewhere near the middle of June.

It is natural to expect that the more wool there is bunched the better price its bidder would offer.

Arrangements are being made to get a number of bidders and bids on this wool. Any one interested in this bunching of the wool, regardless of what county they live in, can bunch their wool with this Association at Thief River Falls.

Mr. Rasmus Oen is collecting the wool in his warehouse.

Any one interested can get more information, in Thief River Falls at Mr. Oens and at the Countp Agents' office, or by inquiring at your bank.

Methods Of Seeding Oats

A CONSIDERABLE acreage of oats still is sown broadcast in the Corn Belt, especially on disked corn stubble. Experimental results indicate that slightly higher average yields may be expected from drilling than from broadcasting. The advantages of drilling are the most economical and uniform distribution of the seed, a more even germination, and a more uniform stand. On a well prepared, moist seed bed from 1 to 1½ inches is sufficient depth for oats.

Treatment of Oats After Seeding.

IN THE Corn Belt usually no treatment is given oats after the crop is sown. On spring plowed land which is cloddy and dry, germination and early growth sometimes may be improved by rolling after seeding. Rolling is seldom advisable, however, after seeding in a well prepared seed bed. If a crust forms on the surface of the surface of the soil as a result of excessive rains immediately after seeding, harrowing with a spike-tooth harrow with the teeth slanting backward often is advisable. The teeth will stir the soil sufficiently to break the crust and kill most of the small weed seedlings without destroying too many of the young oat plants. Large weeds which develop with the crop often can be removed advantageously by pulling or cutting. Preventing the spread of noxious weeds should more than repay the cost of such removal.

When and How to Harvest Oats.

OATS are ready for harvesting when the kernels are in the hard dough stage. This is at about the time the panicles turn yellow. Under normal weather conditions the panicles usually show a greenish white color for several days before turning yellow. If a large acreage is awaiting harvest this is a good time to begin cutting, as there will be less loss by shattering, and the grain will be of good color. If the oats are cut too early the kernels will shrivel in curing and the quality of the grain will be lowered.

In the Corn Belt oats usually are cut with a grain binder. The header and combine harvester-thresher are as yet little used in this section for harvesting oats. Recent studies on the use of the combine for oats in the Corn Belt indicate that they may be efficiently and economically harvested and threshed by this method, provided a large enough crop is grown to warrant the initial cost of the machine.

Which Will You Save?

YOU can save pennies or save chicks. Poultry yard facts show that ordinary untested rations and mixtures such as hard boiled eggs and oatmeal save pennies but not chicks. Usually 50% of them die. Poultrymen who are making money invest one penny more per chick and save 90 to 100% of their chicks. They feed Purina Chick Startena, the buttermilk starting ration containing Cod Liver Oil. We'll be glad to tell you of a feeding plan that's as simple as A B C. It saves chicks and brings them through to early maturity.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Go Ahead Morton was christened George Ashmead, but the initials and the evident impulses of his being inevitably caused an early shift in his appellation. From childhood he invariably went ahead, leaving others to follow if they would. And they usually did follow, for Morton was the sort of man that other men trust on sight, long before they have been able to note his almost uncanny ability to get things done. Morton himself admitted that he was "lucky" and used to wonder over it.

"It's darned queer," he said one day to a westerner, who was visiting the little Virginia town near Washington where Go Ahead had his home, and who had commented on his nickname "When a man gets a complimentary nickname he sort of feels that he's got to live up to it somehow; and then he tries, and things just naturally seem to come his way. My mother always called me Georgie and made me wear long golden curls; and I had them on when my father took me to public school when I was about seven years old. He told me that the boys would make fun of my curls and that if I stood for it he would give me a hiding when I got home—and that he'd make it extra hard if I didn't lick the other boy or bring home some marks showing I'd done my best.

"Well, Dad was a he-man; and I knew he meant exactly what he said So when the other boy started proceedings I lit into him That was most twenty years ago, but I'll bet that boy hasn't stopped running yet. And ever since that fight I've preferred to go ahead—too big a coward to wait, I guess. Pretty soon the boys began to call me Go Ahead; and after that of course I had to go ahead; and most always it seemed to pay."

Later, the westerner, who seemed to be rather inquisitive and whose stay in the town was beginning to seem a little mysterious, asked the hotel clerk about Go Ahead's nerve "He looks a pretty good sort of a man," he observed; "but has he ever stacked up against another good man and showed nerve?"

The clerk grinned. "Oh, well," he said. "I don't know for sure what you western gentlemen call nerve; but they tell a story about something he ever pulled off up in Wyoming last spring that you might consider was kind of nervy."

"Didn't know he'd been up in Wyoming."

"You wouldn't, for all he'd say about it. He's a Department of Justice operative, you know; he does the sort of work that most people credit to the Secret Service. Last spring he'd just finished up in Wyoming and was actually getting on the train for the East when the sheriff hurried up to him and told him he'd got five railway robbers bottled up in an old mine outside the town and that he didn't know how to get at them. 'All right says Go Ahead. 'I'll stop over to see if I can help you out.'

"They got off the train; and the sheriff explained the circumstances 'We've gotten into the mine by another way,' he said; 'and we're within fifty feet of them. They're barricaded with lots of grub and lots of ammunition on the two-hundred-foot level; and we're on a cross-cut about fifteen feet higher. There's a sump connecting the two; and it's easy enough to jump down on them; only it wouldn't get us anything but a through ticket to Paradise. Come along and I'll show you the lay out.'

"So Go Ahead and the sheriff and three deputies go down in the mine and slip up mighty quiet, to the edge of the sump. They can hear the robbers talking. Go Ahead pulls out two big pistols; then he nods to the sheriff and jumps down. And of course the others follow; they couldn't do anything else. The minute Go Ahead lights he jumps to one side to make room for the others, crouches, and begins shooting. And there was merry h—l for a while—or so they say When it was over Go Ahead and one deputy and one robber were the only ones alive; and they were shot all to pieces. But they all got well except the robber and he didn't have much chance, for the boys lynched him. Go Ahead had three bullets through him; and he's just about got over them Maybe you'll think that kind of nervy Mr. Green?"

Green nodded frowningly. Ten minutes later, he was loafing along toward Morton's home.

Morton was gardening in his front yard. "Hello!" he called, looking up, as Green was just opposite.

"Hello, yourself," grinned Green in return. "Want to talk to you if you've got time."

"Got all the time there is." Go Ahead had reached the gate by this time and was pulling it open. "Come on up on the porch and sit down You're from Arizona, aren't you?"

Green glanced at Go Ahead sharply. Then he followed him to the perch and sat down.

"You struck it the first time," he admitted, cheerfully. "Leastways, I reckon you did. I ain't noways real sure myself whether I'm from Arizona or Nevada or yet California."

"Keep a-weaving to and fro across the line, eh? Well, they do say that some of the sheriffs down there do keep people moving all right. Sometimes they even persuade them to go East on a trip."

Green tautened in every muscle His face darkened; and his hand dropped to where a revolver ought to hang—but did not. Then he met Go Ahead's eyes, steely but smiling, and relaxed.

"Sure I Do," Replied That Gentleman, "That's What I Gave It to You For."

"No use stalling, I guess," he decided. "The time to stall was before I came to see you. My name really is Jack Green; and I've brought you a letter from Tom Fair about your cousin, Stella Morton. Here 'tis." He held out an envelope.

Morton took it with a smile. "Glad to know you really are named Green since it seems to please you," he commented. "Otherwise, it's all the same to me. I never heard of any Tom Fair, so far as I can remember; and I'm pretty sure I never had a cousin Stella. Still, I'm always willing to own up when I'm wrong. So, if you still want me to open this letter—" He paused suggestively, looking at Green.

"Sure I do," replied that gentleman, instantly. "That's what I gave it to you for. As for knowing—well, Fair said he guessed you'd be surprised."

Short but Sweet

Prince Arthur of Connaught tells an amusing tale of his experiences when serving as governor general of South Africa. He had made a journey up the Zambesi to some of the paramount chiefs. One of them made a speech of welcome which took three-quarters of an hour to deliver. When he had finished a native interpreter came forward to explain the oration Pointing to the chief, the interpreter discharged his task with a single sentence: "Him say him dam pleased to see you."—Grit.

River Under Ground

Lost River is a name given to a deep gorge where the water of the Moosilauke Branch brook disappears from sight, and at times from sound, for a considerable distance under massive bowlders. It is the third great natural wonder in the Franconia mountains, standing next after the Profile and the Flume, far surpassing the latter in its surprises, its massive rock architecture, and unique in its dark, gloomy caverns. The gorge itself is about one-half mile long 20-30 rods wide and 40-75 feet deep to the brook bed. It was discovered in 1895 by R. C. Jackman of North Woodstock

Covering of Fleas

The kindergarten school was having an open discussion about dogs. Jo was very eager to tell the class about his dog and after others in the room had told what they knew about dogs the teacher said, "Jo may tell us about the outside covering of the body of his dog." "My dog has a covering of fleas," said Jo boastfully.

Witch Doctors Hold Strange Rites

Ordeals of Pain Undergone by African Natives Are Past Belief.

Cape Town, Africa.—Cape Town, Africa, the home of the witch doctor and sinister ju-jus, still believes in trial by ordeal. In small native villages in the heart of the bush the religious fanatics perform their strange rites often and it is hard to comprehend how they can make their bodies do the things they do, writes W. J Makin in the Chicago Tribune.

It is rather unusual, however, to discover an ordeal taking place in one of the big cities. One occurred recently in Durban, where a large Indian population resides. Several whites, including two doctors and myself, were invited to witness a Hindu fire walking ceremony at the Umbilo temple. Several Soutris, or sacred Hindus, their bodies skewered with pins and steel instruments, were to walk across a floor of red embers.

When we arrived on the scene, six tons of firewood were blazing in a huge bonfire. The flames lit up the crowds of dark faces waiting to see this extraordinary ordeal. In time the logs were reduced to glowing charcoal, and these embers were spread out evenly in a bed 24 by 16 feet. This fire pit was roped off from the huge crowd surrounding.

Walk Glowing Carpet.

The glowing carpet was no sooner prepared than the sound of tom-toms beaten frenziedly and reed pipes wailing were heard in the distance. Then the Soutris appeared, all naked to the waist and displaying their bodies skewered with steel pins, and with weights dangling from the pins. One gray-haired woman of sixty years had her tongue skewered. These human pincushions walked straight toward the bed of live coals and without a qualm faced the drift of hot ashes stirred by the breeze. One of the Soutris was walking on nails fixed to the soles of wooden sandals.

While the tom-toms sounded and the reed pipes screeched these Indians walked slowly round the fire bed. The heat was so great that the whites and the crowd of onlookers had to stand a few yards away. Then the tom-toms rose to a frenzy, and the Soutris, one after another, calmly walked across the fire, their feet sinking into the red embers. They appeared to feel no pain, either from the steel pins in their bodies or the fire that should have blistered their feet. In fact, several of them made the journey across the bed of fire twice and even thrice.

After the fire walking the two medical men, Doctor Goldberg and Doctor Witkins, were allowed to examine the feet of the Soutris. They found them to be entirely free from burns or blisters. Doctor Goldberg told me that he could offer no physiological explanation for the healthy condition of these Hindus, for the moment they were relieved of the pins and skewers they were normal men and women. They smilingly showed their feet to the Europeans to prove that they were unharmed.

The steel pins when withdrawn drew no blood and the wounds were barely discernible. The woman who walked through the fire has done so year by year for the last ten years. She appeared to faint when the ordeal was over, but one of the Hindu priests insisted that she was merely throwing off the inner volition.

The Soutris after the fire walking gathered ashes from the fire and distributed them to the clamoring crowd, who regard the ashes as a good omen in keeping off ill health.

Dance on Swords.

The fire-walking ceremony has some resemblance to another Asiatic ordeal, the Khalifa, often performed by the Malays in Cape Town. I have witnessed several of these ceremonies and must confess that there is much that is inexplicable in them.

The Khalifa usually takes place in a Malay house. The ceremony begins with a reading from the Koran, and then the tom-toms work the worshipers into a religious frenzy. Short native swords are produced, and the Malays hack at themselves without, however, drawing blood from any of the cuts on their limbs.

Some of them are able to dance with bare feet on the upturned blades of sharp swords, others saw at their protruding tongues, while I have seen one dancer who could twirl a sword in the sockets of his eyes without apparently injuring himself.

Much of this may be merely clever sword play, with the spectators half hypnotized by the incessant thumping of tom-toms and the swirling clouds of incense. But like the fire walkers these Malays can skewer their bodies with long steel instruments, puncture their cheeks, and be nailed by the ears to large blocks of wood without any blood coming from the wounds. At the last Khalifa I saw in Cape Town the collection was made toward the end of the ceremony by an old Malay with three skewers protruding from his mouth and piercing his cheeks.

Demand Even Thunder Be Kept Up-to-Date

Paris.—Even thunder has had to be brought up-to-date to satisfy the moderns in the French theater.

The old thunder machine that helped make stage storms for generations of patrons of the Paris opera has been scrapped and an arrangement of shutters and big drums substituted. The former one was a huge chariot running on iron rails and made so much noise that more than once spectators were frightened. The new one makes less noise but, say opera authorities, is much more efficient.

Woodpecker Has Taste for Good Rich Cream

Renton, Wash.—A woodpecker here beats the famous early bird—and gets a drink of cream. This was discovered by Mrs. H E. Wilson, who after repeatedly finding a hole in her milk bottle caps with the cream missing, arose early and peeked from a window as soon as the milkman had left the bottles. A brown flicker alighted on the porch and carefully drilled a hole through the cap, quickly sucking as much cream as the long bill might reach. Mrs. Wilson recognized the woodpecker as one she had been feeding meat scraps during the winter.

Shanghai Mission Is Kept Busy During War

Shanghai.—Civil war, while driving thousands of foreign missionaries from their work in China, has caused one mission enterprise in Shanghai to flourish. This is the Shanghai mission to riksha men, which, according to its recently published annual report, ministered to the needs, physical and spiritual, of 316,700 coolies, mostly riksha pullers, during 1927.

More than 100,000 free meals were served and sandals and other cheap clothing distributed, while these contacts were used for preaching Christianity to the lowliest from Shanghai streets. These totals include a large proportion of "repeaters."

Thousands of destitute men driven by outside disorders to seek shelter in Shanghai tried to eke out a living by pulling rikshas, with the result that 1927 saw more of this class on the starvation line than ever.

The mission was founded in 1918 by George Matheson, a British missionary, and Mrs. Matheson, who still conduct it.

Skating Pattern in Dream

That one of his most successful ice patterns came to him in a dream, was recently revealed by Sidney Charlton, who claims the world's trick skating championship. While in Switzerland he dreamed that he was skating before a large crowd who seemed to applaud all out of proportion to his act. When he looked on the ice he found that he had drawn with his skates a perfect pattern of a sunflower. The surprise awakened him and he jumped out of bed to jot down the turns, which he found next day to be practicable.

Ambitious Fence Post

The most ambitious fence post in the world is probably on a Pennsylvania farm. It has grown into a tree! The Farm Journal, which publishes a photograph of the freak, recounts that the fence was built in 1878 of new catalpa timbers. The other posts remained as dead as fence posts should, but this one put down shoots and attained a height of six feet within a year. Today it is 40 feet high, with a spread of 45 feet.

HISTORIC IDA LEWIS ROCK PLACED ON AUCTION BLOCK

Scene of Thrilling Deeds of One of America's Greatest Heroines to Be Sold.

Newport, R. I.—Ida Lewis Rock in Newport harbor, scene of the thrilling deeds of one of America's greatest heroines, is to be sold by the government.

Where lighthouse keepers tended their lamps for many years an automatic light now burns. Therefore the lighthouse service is to dispense with all the property on the island except the ground on which the light is actually located. Bids are to be opened in June.

Ida Lewis, after whom the rock is named, is generally known as the Grace Darling of America. Originally the lighthouse was known as Lime Rock light, but the name was changed in honor of Miss Lewis, who, after her father's death, kept the light burning for 33 years. She was made keeper by special act of congress in 1869.

From her childhood Ida Lewis loved the sea. The grizzled tars who sailed from this old port taught her the locations of the safety lanes for ships and the hazards. She was an adept at rowing.

When she was seventeen years old she effected her first rescue, saving four men whose boat had been capsized by a rough sea. In the years that followed she was credited with snatching seventeen more men from death in the swells of the harbor—most of them soldiers who were going to or from Fort Adams.

Medals and decorations for extreme bravery were showered upon her But she sought no fame or favor other than to remain on the little island until death. She died at the age of seventy, and a throng pressed into the old cemetery to stand with bared heads at her burial.

Workers on Santa Fe Give Hope to Husbands

Kansas City, Mo.—While hen-pecked husbands of Kansas City waited hopefully but skeptically, members of the Anti-Henpeck Club of Santa Fe Employees are seeking means for enforcing a set of by-laws which in reality is a bill of rights for married men.

Some of the by-laws were:

"Man, after work hours, shall be privileged to sit in the front room of his house in his undershirt, with his shoes off and his feet on the library table.

"Man shall be privileged to enter his home after 2 a. m. without undergoing any questioning from his wife.

"Man shall not be required to explain the presence of blonde hairs and strange perfume nor be required to tell where he has been."

Some men possess neither gold nor silver, but they have lots of brass.

GETS "MAGIC LOGS" IN PANAMA SWAMP

Explorer Tells of Incredible Hardships Endured.

Chicago.—Field Museum of Natural History at Chicago announces the early exhibition of a "magic log." In the quest of this rare bit of wood a collector risked his life in the steaming jungles of Bocas del Toro in western Panama. This intrepid adventurer is G. Proctor Cooper, war veteran and forester. The story of the hardships he has endured in his search, such as tramping through miles of knee-deep, yellow, slimy mud, shoeless part of the time, and braving the perils of swamp fevers, to fall exhausted for a short sleep in the mud, unmindful of the attacks of mosquitoes and crawling, creeping things, was revealed in a letter from Mr. Cooper to Prof. Samuel J. Record, recently made public at the museum.

Prized by Indians.

The magic wood—"magic" to the Indians of Panama, who impute to it marvelous curative powers—is the bloodwood cacique (pronounced kah-see-key), one of the rarest woods in the world, according to Professor Record, who is research associate in wood technology at Field museum and a member of the faculty of the Yale University school of forestry. It is scarcely more than a name to white men who previously have penetrated the region, and, even among the Indians who prize and cherish it, only the wisest can recognize it, says Professor Record.

"Cacique" means chieftain and represents the esteem in which the Indians hold it. Bloodwood is descriptive of its glowing ruby-and-black coloration, in some lights suffused with a golden sheen. Prior to Mr. Cooper's discovery of two logs on the present expedition only one small fragment no bigger than a man's finger, obtained by a timber cruiser from a native and sent to Professor Record at Yale, was known to exist outside Panama.

Mr. Cooper relates his adventures as follows:

"I have returned from the mountains, and that is really more than I thought likely at certain stages of the trip. Honestly, I never had such tough going in all my travels in the bush. Mud, mud, yellow slimy mud to the knees, swamps to the waist, rivers up to the hips, and currents so strong that the mules were carried many yards below the landings. Rock and mud slides, which in one case buried some of the packs, and rains so hard that the trail was like a steam bath.

Tough to Cut.

"Well, the trail had to end eventually and we got to camp at midafternoon.

"When I began to look for trees my axman failed to show up, and I had to hew them down with my machete—and that was a blistering job. It was a good place to collect, and I finally located the famous cacique. It was a tough one to cut, but I brought out two sections of the trunk. I used my riding mule to pack these out, and I had to hike—the last mile in my socks, as my shoes began to drop off."

Bloodwood cacique comes not from a live tree, but from rotting chunks and logs in the jungle, Mr. Cooper explains. It is the almost imperishable heart of a fallen trunk that the ants and worms have picked clean of bark and sapwood and left to molder half-buried in the putrescent litter, he writes. There is something uncanny about striking one of these seemingly decayed sticks and bringing to light the deep red, sound and solid wood, he says. In the mystic rites of the primitive natives a piece of the wood placed over a bad wound is believed to stanch the flow of blood and quickly heal the injury. The Indians believe also that a bit of it behind one's ear will purge the blood of fever.

For years vague tales of this rare wood were heard, but previous efforts to obtain it or locate its source came to nothing, says Professor Record.

Old Ship Too Tough to Burn for Movie

Portland, England.—Amy is tough She's so tough she won't even burn. Old sailors think Amy's a witch!

Three times the naval chaps have tried to destroy Amy—an old three-masted schooner—to provide a fitting and thrilling finish for an official moving picture. And three times Amy has positively refused to die, even for the movie director.

The blowing up of the aged schooner is necessary for completion of the film which tells the gallant story of the British "Q" boat's exploits in the fight against German submarines.

Tugs, a destroyer and a submarine have thrice convoyed Amy out into the channel and pointed out her grave. They loaded her up with high explosive, but each time the electric connection declined to function. Then they poured oil all over Amy's decks and sails, and touched her off. But the fire went out and they towed Amy back to her dock.

Yes, old Amy's tough. And she is haunted, old salts say.

PUBLIC WINKS AT NEW EAR TESTS

Drooping Eyelids Featured in This Method.

New York.—Holding a watch near the ear to test hearing may soon be a thing of the past. Ear tests developed by scientists of the Bell telephone laboratories here make use of accurate instruments which, with psychological aids, determine a person's exact degree of hearing. False claims of either deafness or exceptional hearing are of no avail, for the truth can now be easily discovered.

A push-button on the instrument which measures the tone emitted for the test permits the interruption of the sound at any moment. If a patient says he hears a tone and then claims that he still hears it when it has been cut off, it is evident that he has been deceiving himself.

Another device makes it possible to switch the sound to either ear or both. A loud tone in either ear causes the eye nearer it to blink slightly, though the patient may claim that he hears nothing.

The patient is made to read aloud in his normal voice in another test, while a tone is switched from ear to ear. The intensity of the voice is regulated by the sound of the voice and this can be drowned out. One will, however, be able to hear his voice with one ear while the tone is switched to the other, and he will not change the level of his voice as the tone is switched back and forth. If he is deaf in one ear, he will raise his voice every time the tone sounds in his normal ear.

When the tone is switched on and off both ears, a person with normal hearing will raise his voice each time the tone is turned on, while one who is deaf will continue to read without changing his voice.

To detect a false claim of deafness in one ear, the tone is switched repeatedly back and forth between the ears at varying intensity, and the patient is asked to signal each time he hears a sound. A truthful signal can be made almost instantaneously, but if the patient must stop to decide each time in which ear he hears the sound, much more time is required and he quickly becomes confused, thus betraying himself.

These tests are expected to prove valuable in compensation cases where loss of hearing is involved.

Apparatus for Cure of Air Sickness Invented

Berlin.—Air sickness, cousin to seasickness, need no longer haunt the dreams of the airplane passenger starting from Europe's largest airdrome, Tempelhof field, Berlin.

The Tempelhof officials have installed an apparatus for inhaling antiairsickness fumes and are convinced that it is a success. They feel confident that other airdromes of the Lufthansa (German Federal Airways corporation) will emulate the example of the Berlin flying field.

Any passenger who fears that he may become airsick, may inhale the antidote, which consists in the main of oxygen gas and cinnamon. The mixture has a quieting effect upon the nerves of the diaphragm.

Air passengers who arrived at Tempelhof quite ill from air sickness were brought back to a normal condition within less than five minutes through the inhalation of the antidote. It is planned in due time to have an inhalation apparatus installed on every passenger plane with tubes running to every seat.

Swede Engineer to Try Sea Trip in Motor Boat

Stockholm.—During the height of the transatlantic flight season an attempt is to be made to cross the Atlantic in a motor boat.

C. G. Petterson, a well-known Swedish engineer, built the boat, a racer, during the winter. He plans to complete the necessary tests early this summer. When suitable weather reports are received he will leave Stockholm accompanied by two Swedish scientists.

Both Petterson's companions are experts from the government weather bureau here. They expect to make interesting observations which are expected to prove a valuable addition to what is already known on atmospheric conditions in the Atlantic.

The route planned by the expedition will take them to North America via Spitzbergen, Iceland, and Greenland.

No Stump Can Stump Woman Stump Lifters

Bordeaux, France.—A stump puller which never needed the protection of patent rights is still being used in the vineyards where grow the world-famous wines of France. Women furnish the power for it and pull out the old, old roots of worn-out vines.

A narrow wooden trestle, like a double ladder, supports a wooden drum on which is wound a chain. The drum is turned by two crossed wooden bars mortised on the end of it. A hook at the end of the chain is placed under the stump and the women wind up the chain. It isn't as easy as it sounds, but after thirty or forty years of such work the women develop quite a lot of muscle.

FIND NEW METHOD OF PUTTING OUT FIRES

Alkali Metal Compound Paralyzes the Blaze.

St. Louis.—A new method of putting out fire has been discovered.

For nearly two thousand years man has been fighting his arch enemy—fire—with two well-worn methods.

These methods have been, first, to cool the burning material below its "kindling" point, and second, to exclude oxygen.

Now the "catalytic method" has been perfected—so-called for lack of a better descriptive term. Yet the two chemists who perfected this third method have no satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon.

Chemists Explain.

Recently at the general session of the American Chemical society Charles Allen Thomas and Carroll A. Hochwalt, consulting chemists of Dayton, Ohio, described the alkali metal compound that paralyzes fire so effectively and then threw the "why" of this into the laps of the chemists present. They also demonstrated the effectiveness of this and other compounds on gasoline fires, which are extremely difficult to quench.

"We started work by adding material to water to increase its effectiveness on wood fires," explained Mr. Thomas, who read the paper. "We accidentally found that sodium potassium carbonate would even put out a gasoline fire. This led to further work which in turn brought us to the remarkable discovery of the 'catalytic method' of extinguishing fire.

"Water is a representative medium for cooling material below its kindling point and carbon tetrachloride, foam and various other means have been used to blanket oxygen from the fire. Yet this 'catalytic method' neither cools nor blankets a burning oil fire.

Apparatus for Testing.

"We discovered that a solution of sodium potassium carbonate extinguished an oil fire. We thought we knew why this compound put out the fire—namely: because the compound had given off carbon dioxide which blanketed the flame. Thus we thought that ammonium carbonate would work even better, since it decomposes much easier to carbon dioxide. We were greatly surprised when it did not work. Further work showed that this phenomenon resided with the potassium and that any water soluble compound which contained potassium, rubidium or caesium exhibited this remarkable result.

"After developing an apparatus for testing, it became possible to investigate the water soluble compounds for the presence of the same catalytic flame extinguishing property as is possessed by sodium potassium carbonate. With a few minor exceptions, every element capable of forming a water soluble salt was studied. Practically all of the salts of the alkali metals exhibited this catalytic fire extinguishing effect.

"A peculiarly interesting point is the fact that all of the compounds of the alkali metals that have oxygen in them have a greater extinguishing effect than those without oxygen."

Mr. Thomas stated that the results of this discovery are now being utilized commercially and that the new compound puts out an artificial fire in 9 to 12 seconds, while the shortest extinguished fire with standard soda acid extinguisher is from 35 to 45 seconds.

London Society Buys "Handy" Rural Homes

London.—The plan of running a small country house within easy motoring distance of London is being increasingly adopted by society folks, who have a town residence also.

Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught have just bought a small house in the Surrey hills from which they can easily reach town by car to attend many functions, and be able to follow country pursuits in their spare time.

The prince of Wales bought a home in Surrey some months ago. Lord and Lady Lee of Fraeham, who gave Chequers to the nation for the use of prime ministers, have returned to White Lodge Richmond park.

Others have bought small houses, twenty or thirty miles out, which they can easily reach from the West End after theater or other functions.

Every State Now Boasts Airplane Landing Field

Washington.—Aviators can now fly to any state and find modern airports and supplies for their planes, according to a survey made by the Commerce department.

The United States has now 1,075 airport landing fields and nearly 4,000 other places on which planes can make landings. Aids for day or night flying are available at 231 fields.

California with 115 air fields leads all other states, but Wyoming with 21 fields has the highest proportion of most modernly equipped air posts.

Texas is second with 90 fields, Pennsylvania third with 68 and Illinois fourth with 58.

Beats the Slickers

New York.—George Hatch of St. Louis knows how to circumvent the city slickers. He came to town with $136.66, and wanted to spend the night under the protection of the police. So they locked him up for disorderly conduct, a charge which was dismissed when explanations were made in court.

Historic Old Deed in Archives of Virginia

Discovery of the original copy of the birth certificate of Michigan among the musty archives of Virginia at Richmond, was made by Col. John W. Williams, clerk of the Virginia house of delegates.

This document is the original deed by which Virginia conveyed the Northwest territory to the United States. Later the Northwest territory was carved to make Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

The deed, handwritten and yellow with age, was discovered in the middle of an ancient volume of papers, one of the many which Colonel Williams has been indexing for years. It bears the signature of Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee and James Monroe, "delegates for the commonwealth in the congress of the United States."

Probably the most remarkable feature of the ancient document is Virginia's stipuation that the states to be carved from the territory must be "distinct Republican states," limited in size to be not more than 150 or less than 100 miles square.—Detroit News.

Any Woman Can Look Stylish
By MAE MARTIN

Most stylish looking women you see are simply "good managers." They don't open their pocket-books wide for every change in fashion. They know simple ways to make last season's things conform to this season's styles.

Thousands of them have learned how easily they can transform a dress, or blouse, or coat, by the quick magic of home tinting or dyeing. With true, fadeless Diamond Dyes, anyone can do this successfully. The "know-how" is in the dyes. Each package represents the perfection of 50 years of dye-making. They don't streak or spot like inferior dyes. New, fashionable tints appear like magic, right over the out-of-style or faded colors. Tinting with Diamond Dyes is as easy as bluing, and dyeing takes just a little longer. Only Diamond Dyes produce perfect results. Insist on them and save disappointment.

My new 64-page book, "Color Craft," gives hundreds of ways you can make your home and clothes stylish and attractive, and do it with little money. It's FREE. Send for your copy, NOW. Write Mae Martin, Home Service Dept., Diamond Dyes, Burlington, Vermont.

Threw Shoes at Preacher

The sermon of the dean of Peterborough at the cathedral in Peterborough, England, praising the flapper's stern qualities, displeased an elderly woman worshiper. She first protested against the dean's eulogy of the modern girl, but when she found out that her protests went unheeded, she removed both of her shoes and flung them at the dean, then she took off her hat and threw it at the head of the "offensive" preacher.

Karl Marx's House

The house in Treves, in the Rhineland, where Karl Marx was born on May 5, 1818, and where the "father of scientific socialism" spent the years of his youth, was recently bought by the national executive committee of the Social Democratic party of Germany. Berlin papers say that the Socialists will preserve the house as a sort of monument to Marx. Marx died in exile in London in 1883.

Cute in a Baby—Awful at Three—and it's Dangerous
by Ruth Brittain

Thumb sucking does look sweet in a baby, but it is disgusting in the three-year-old and sometimes it hangs on until fifteen or sixteen! The habit may cause an ill-formed mouth or induce adenoids; and it always interferes with digestion. Pinning the sleeve over the hand; attaching mittens, or putting on cardboard cuffs, which prevent bending the arms at the elbows, are some of the ways to stop the habit.

Another bad habit—irregularity in bowel action—is responsible for weak bowels and constipation in babies. Give the tiny bowels an opportunity to act at regular periods each day. If they don't act at first, a little Fletcher's Castoria will soon regulate them. Every mother should keep a bottle of it handy to use in case of colic, cholera, diarrhea, gas on stomach and bowels, constipation, loss of sleep, or when baby is cross and feverish. Its gentle influence over baby's system enables him to get full nourishment from his food, helps him gain, strengthens his bowels.

Castoria is purely vegetable and harmless—the recipe is on the wrapper. Physicians have prescribed it for over 30 years. With each package, you get a valuable book on Motherhood. Look for Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper so you'll get the genuine.

Fame for Girl Musician

The Symphonic orchestra of Vienna has been conducted by twenty-two-year-old Gertrude Hrdlicaka in an important concert. Critics highly praised her work as a conductor. A few weeks before she conducted the orchestra the girl musician was almost unknown. She made her success over night as a concert violinist.

Short Lessons in Dairying

A series of 52 articles by Land O' Lakes Creameries and published by the Farmers Cooperative Creamery in the interests of its patrons.

LESSON XXV

Warm Weather Warnings: Milk is not only the most perfect food for humans and young stock, but it also furnishes the most favorable source of growth for bacteria. Bacteria makes its most rapid growth at a temperature of from 70 to 90 degrees F. For this reason extra effort and precaution is required during the summer months to produce sweet, fine flavored milk and cream.

All dairy utensils should be washed as soon as possible after use. Rinse first with cold water to remove the milk and then wash with warm water and washing powder, using a dairy brush instead of a cloth. Rinse with boiling water and set in the sun during the day and where the air is free from dust.

Cool the cream in cold water immediately after separating. Have a cream cooling tank to hold the cream cans and through which all the water is pumped from the well to the stock. Your creamery can supply you with a cream cooling tank at cost.

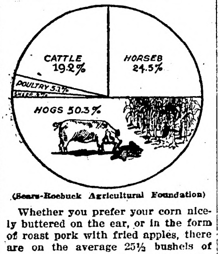
Cutting Down Corn Surplus



(Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation)

Whether you prefer your corn nicely buttered on the ear, or in the form of roast pork with fried apples, there are on the average 25½ bushels of corn coming to each person in the United States every year, according to experts of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. In 1925 there was a bit more; this year there will probably be a few ears less apiece but plenty for all of us just the same.

Less than a fifth of all this corn leaves the farm. Excluding a small fraction of the best grade that is kept out for seed purposes, 81% of those 2,850,000,000 bushels runs around on legs in the following forms: Hogs, 50.3%; horses, 24.5%; cattle, 19.2%; poultry, 5.1% and sheep, 0.9%.

How Many Will You Save?

IF your newly-arrived chicks could talk they would say: "Do not feed us until we are 72 hours old. We are supplied with food during this period by the remaining part of the egg yolks which we absorbed into our bodies just before we were hatched. When we are 72 hours old give us a feed which will provide life and growth vitamins." There are 1592 hatcheries which say, "Feed Purina." They know what it takes to keep chicks alive and growing. A new shipment of Startena is here. Tell us how many bags you want.
